Little Duke

The ARISTOCRAT of BOYS FOOTWEAR

THE boot bill of the average schoolboy is an item that dips very deeply into the family purse. The alarming increase—both in the original price of boots and in repairing charges—makes the choice of thoroughly sound and reliable footwear in the first instance the cheapest by far in the end.

"Little Duke" Boys' Footwear represents the highest achievement in quality and style.

How to Safely Bring Back the Colour to Grey, Dyed, or Bleached Hair by the use of "Saonetto" Hair Colouring.

If your hair is grey, partly grey, or going grey, and you wish to bring back the natural and original colour, that is easy.

If your hair has been spoilt by dyeing, or if the colour has been bleached, and you want it brought back to its former freshness and beauty, it can be done.

If your hair is faded and lifeless, lacks tone, or you are in any way dissatisfied with the colour, all these things can be put right.

It is the "SAONETTO" Hair Colouring, a regenerative restorer that will bring the colour, or give it where lacking. It is cleanly, is fast and permanent in practice, does not stain the skin nor come off on the brushes, linen, &c. No smell. Nothing to betray that you have used it. Absolutely safe. No grease. No stickiness. One liquid.

OUR ADVICE.

It should at the outset be recognised that you cannot colour the hair a lighter tint than the natural and original shade. You can bleach it, or any dark hair, to a lighter shade, but you will be sure to get tired of it, and we advise you not to do it. Choose a shade of our "Saonetto" to match your hair as it was in its original colour and beauty—before it turned grey.

If you have used hair dyes with partial satisfaction, or none at all, first cleanse the hair from the dye you have used by a light sponging with hydrogen peroxide, and then use "Saonetto."

If your hair has been bleached and you are tired of it, and wish to return to a darker and more natural shade in harmony with your eyes and eyebrows, choose a shade of our "Saonetto" (at first a shade lighter than the new tint you desire to effect, because bleached hair is very absorbative), and you will gain your wishes.

Proof of Merit

Dame Deborah Primrose: "The very best stain for the hair which has ever come under my notice (and I have experimented with many scores of them) is 'SAONETTO.' It never comes off on hat lining or pillow."Again —"I am so pleased with your hair stain that I am continually recommending it to my correspondents."

SAFETY.

"The 'Saonetto' gives the hair a natural colour, which the most critical eye fails to detect.—A. B. GRIFFITHS, Ph.D., F.R.S.E., Analyst."

"After a series of carefully applied tests, I failed to detect the presence of any ingredient of an undesirable character, and I consider it to be a perfectly harmless preparation.—H. GRANVILLE SHARPE, F.C.S., Analyst."

SHADES and PRICES.

The "Saonetto" Hair Colouring is prepared in seven colours: No. 1 Black, No. 2 Dark Brown, No. 3 Medium Brown, No. 4 Hazel or Light Brown, No. 5 Auburn or Chestnut, No. 6 Golden Chestnut, No. 7 Gold Blonde.

Put up in 4oz. or medium size, price 5/-, and large size (10 oz.) price 10/6. Post free 6d. extra. Packed in plain wrapper, free from observation. Full directions with every bottle. Make P.O. payable St. Paul's Road P.O. to The "SAONETTO" CO., THE STUDIO, ST. PAUL'S CRESCENT, London, N.W.1. Please name THE BYSTANDER.

With first order, state number and colour you think you ought to use, and send us with your order a tiny piece of hair (not grey) as a guide to colour.

Some reasons why the Sereine Massage Apparatus should be used by every Woman.

It provides a delightful tonic for the flesh, skin and nerves. Makes a coarse skin soft as velvet.

Ensures for every woman a firm, round, well-developed bust and neck, shapely limbs, a healthy, radiant complexion, rich, luxuriant hair, removes all wrinkles, "crow's feet," and other blemishes, and assists to perfect and lasting health.

Fills out hollow cheeks and "salt cellars."

Extracts all dirt and grease from the pores, and gives life to a dull complexion.

Stops falling hair, prevents baldness by stimulating action of the blood, and removes all scurf and dandruff by suction.

Relieves rheumatic and other pains.

BURBERRY

Distinctive Outfits

Pattern Bunches of Urber Silk in all colours will be sent on request.

The "Lexington" Pyjamas.

AT THE DAWN OF DAY.

After early tea has disturbed your slumbers and the bath has set your blood coursing, how delightful it is to don underwear, shirt, tie, collar, each of the best—the best in quality, the right design, most charming colours, all in unison. Not a thing one could wish otherwise, and, to cap assurance, each bearing a Burberry label – the banner of the Best.

IN THE FIELD OF SPORT.

Not as spectator, but as participant where youth most aspires to excel—there the "Burberry" comes to its own! Outercovering to face the elements, and underwear to complete comfort. The 'Varsity "blood" will have "Burberry"; in it he competes on favourable terms with all rivals, and is conscious of being exceedingly well-dressed.

IN THE GARDEN OF SLEEP.

Truly the Burberry Suit, so aptly fitted for the strenuous day, is well discarded for the Burberry Night Suit, with colours, pattern, texture, all suggesting sleep—rest in Elysium.

The best way to buy a RING is after leisurely selection and careful comparison in the quietness of your Home.

THE RING BOOK, which we will send to you, delineates 122 Gem Rings in all their natural Sparkle, Colours, and Beauty. You can select from it as surely as if you were choosing from the actual Rings. People from all over the World are buying by this method, safely and easily.

After making your selection, we send the Ring fully insured on a fortnight's unconditional approval. If, within 14 days of receipt, you wish to change your mind, we will either exchange the Ring, allowing full value for it, or you can return it and receive your money back in full.

If you keep the Ring, it is on this understanding:—Whenever you wish, after one year, or twenty years, we will re-purchase your Ring, under Ring Book Conditions, at 10% less than the price paid.

This perpetual re-purchase condition is made possible by large buying of unmounted Stones and by working to a closer profit margin than is general in Ring-selling.

We seriously claim that our unusual method of buying Diamonds at first hand, and selling RINGS DIRECT, reduces Selling Costs and benefits the Buyer correspondingly.

WRITE FOR "THE RING BOOK."
It tells all about the manner of RING-buying which safeguards you perpetually. We send it free to anyone interested in Engagement, Gift, Dress and Men's Rings priced from £5:5:0 up to £325. Please write to-day for "The RING BOOK" and SIZE CARD.

That Champagne Tax

I AM glad to see that the stalwarts are all sticking to the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the matter of the super-tax on champagne; but they rely too much, I fancy, on one argument. They say, in other words, "We do not mind going without champagne, as we shall all have to when it costs so much, but do think of the loss this will inflict on France, our Ally—especially now that she has lost the American, Russian, and German markets." Mr. Chamberlain has already said that he does not believe the increased cost will lessen the consumption. And from what one sees going on everywhere, Mr. Chamberlain may be quite right. So I will appeal to him on less altruistic grounds. I will ask him to think of the very great majority of his countrymen who are not profiteers or millionaires, and to whom a bottle of champagne is a sort of symbol, as it were, of joy and rejoicing. It is the fitting mark of a great occasion. But it will be impossible to celebrate the christening of one's first-born with a bottle of wine which, in future, will be too costly for a decently economical Admiralty to use for the baptism of a super-Dreadnought.

A Sporting Bet

OF recent years our own Divorce Courts have been pretty busy, but we are still children in these matters compared with our friends in the United States. Therefore, as a sporting bet, I have heard of few to equal that made by a young New York millionaire and his bride on their wedding-day last week, when a wedding-cake, weighing 25 lbs., was hermetically sealed and casked. "It will not be opened," I read, "until the twenty-fifth anniversary of the wedding."

American Couples

I CANNOT help wondering what are the odds about them eating it together. That the couple have gone away together and intend to live together will probably make another American couple very doubtful about it coming off. This couple, the wife a writer and the husband a pianist, claim to have solved the problem of lasting marriages. They do not live together, and their marriage, which has only just been announced, has actually lasted for five years. Think of it! After this none can have any doubt as to the ingenuity of the American mind, or, indeed, of the capacity for fidelity of the American married couple—if they do not see much of each other. But the fact of the husband being a pianist and the wife a writer, perhaps makes this a special case.

The Garrick Affair

EVERYONE, I am sure, must have sympathised deeply with Miss Laurette Taylor after her painful experience that Thursday night at the Garrick Theatre. For is she not "Peg of all our hearts"? But our sympathy would have been even deeper, if possible, had we known that for four long days and nights her mind was wracked with the idea that she might be the innocent cause of international trouble, as she told us in her speech the following Monday night. Fortunately, however, the American Ambassador was present on each occasion. Besides, pending the setting-up in working order of the League of Nations, there is always the Supreme Council and San Remo. But all's well that ends well.

IN THE OLYMPIAN FIELDS By Fred Buchanan

Peace: "How much longer do you want to "Spa" about with my ball?"

BYSTANDER COMMENTS (continued)

One Night in Rome will have as many in London as the art and charm of Miss Taylor can secure for it. Here's luck to her! She took her trouble standing up on the Thursday night and her triumph sitting down on the Monday.

The Prince

As a race I do not think we really lack imagination. The way in which the public mind is caught every now and then by some event or some compelling personality is enough to prove this. But there are times when one is almost forced to think that there is something the matter with us in this direction. For instance, I see and hear very few signs of our realising the wonders, the picturesqueness, the sentiment, and poetry with which the Prince of Wales's tour absolutely teems. Perhaps we are hardly told enough about it. But the daily cables ought to be enough to stir the imagination more than they seem to have done.

At Wanganui

THINK of the places he has been visiting, the people he has seen, which are "all British." Never mind the others, for a moment. And then try to fill in the picture of the wonderful greeting he gets—and gives. Think of Wanganui, N.Z., where the reception ended "in the head man of the returned soldiers and two nurses drawing the Prince, standing and waving, round the ground in his car"—of the New Zealand squatter and his family who kept up in a motor-car with the Royal train for 100 miles over a break-neck road. There is much more than mere picturesqueness in these things.

"THE DOG IN THE MANGER"

New Fashions

ARE you thinking of getting some overalls? Somehow or other I do not think the movement will catch on very strongly with us. We are too shy. If everybody could blossom forth in them on the same morning it might be all right. But most Englishmen are almost morbid in their dread of being "different." Dress an English schoolboy differently from his fellows, and his life would be made one long-drawn agony—subjectively and objectively. I don't believe an English baby boy would get the full amount of nourishment out of his milk if he thought he was having it out of a bottle of unorthodox shape.

A Hint to the New Rich

BUT I wish some of the new rich would wear overalls when at work. I brushed against one the other day when we were both on our way home, and accumulated quite a lot of raw material off him. I fancy he was in the almost extinct building business. I cannot afford that sort of thing these days. Too much brushing takes too much out of one's well-worn garments. It would be a kindly and considerate action on the part of the new rich engaged in certain professions if they would think over this suggestion.

The Upper House

SOMEWHERE or other, in a book by Mr. Anatole France, stands a warning: "If you touch the machine, it'll go to bits." I don't think Mr. France was thinking of the House of Lords, for his gallantry would lead his mind rather to a House of Ladies, but when I consider Mr. Bonar Law's reply to Commander Kenworthy I cannot help wishing that he had said: "I won't touch the House of Lords," than "I cannot say when I shall." According to view, the Conservatives say that the Lords are all right, the Liberals that they're so-so, and Labour that they must go.

Reforming the Peers

WELL, Labour is not in power; if Labour comes in it may try to sweep away the Lords: is it not rather naïve of us to think that Labour would be any kinder to a reformed peerage? Nobody knows what is in the Government's mind, but it could reform the Lords only by excluding those who had no experience of affairs by confining the seats to Colonial Governors, ex-Ministers, Law Lords, etc. Possibly one might exclude the Bishops, or admit Nonconformists and Jewish leaders. And then? How much forrarder should we be? We should have created a duplicate House of Commons, a House of Bigwigs, which would lose the quality of the landed class . . . and leave Labour just as hostile as it is to-day.

Relieving Women

MANY years ago, when suffrage was fashionable, I ventured to say something kind to a young woman just out of Holloway for arson. She turned upon me in a style that made me pray for the Muzzling Order, and said, "You men are amazing. You always want either to kick or kiss us." I assured her that I wished to resort to neither of these extremities, but her remark is brought to my mind by Dr. Macnamara's statement that a committee, endowed with £500,000, has been created "to train women whose earning capacity has been prejudiced by the War." Frankly, I don't understand. Where is the woman whose earning capacity has been prejudiced by the War? For five years we have been told that women have never made so much money; we have seen them admitted to the Bar; we find them crowding into the medical, dental, pharmaceutic professions—and now a Committee is to discover women whose earning capacity has been prejudiced. Who are they? Widows? No; they are pensioned. Air-raid victims? No, since we do nothing for the men. I give it up. And, incidentally, since I must pay my share of that £500,000, I call upon my Member of Parliament to find out, among other things, the size of the Committee's staff. I'd like to know if the earning power of its flappers has suffered prejudice.

People, Oddly Enough, Not Yet "Screened" on the Movies

5 to 7 Per Cent.

At last the Government is talking. For five years we have been buying War Loans, and War Bonds, and Victory Bonds, and a few months later discovering with fury that the stock we bought at £85 staggers about £77. This because, no doubt following the parable, the lenders of the eleventh loan drew higher interest than the lenders of the first. As there are limits to our stupidity, we did not mob the banks when the last loan came out. Now at last we are offered our due: the new 15-year bonds will bring in at least 5 per cent. If at the same time the Government is borrowing from the banks at anything up to 6½ per cent., the public will get 6 per cent.; if the banks charge 6½ per cent. we shall get 7 per cent. This is a business proposition, for it means that we shall not see our new stock go down when the rate of interest rises, though I have before now been warned not to prophesy unless I know. I forecast for this issue a deserved success. I will buy some if somebody will lend me a penny-halfpenny for a stamp.

The Crown Princess of Sweden

THE tragically sudden death of the Crown Princess of Sweden—our "Princess May" of old days—has cast the gloom of mourning over the opening of the season. The King and Queen were to have attended the first night of the Opera last night. It would have been a "tiara night." The Court has returned to London from Windsor, but, until the time of mourning is over, the King and Queen will take no part in public functions of the purely social kind.

The Three Arts Ball has been abandoned altogether, Mrs. Saxton Noble has changed the date of her dance until after the mourning, and many other functions at which members of the Royal Family had promised to be present have been postponed.

A Happy Family

THE mourning and these postponements are not wholly a conventional expression. The Duke of Connaught and his children hold a special place in the affections of the people, and a particularly special place in the affections of those who know them. The "Connaughts" have always been the most approachable of all our royalties; always royal, yet so human, so understanding, and ever so kind and loyal to their friends. It was the happiest of families.

The first break in the happy circle came fifteen years ago when Princess May married her Swedish prince and sailed away to become ultimately Crown Princess of Sweden. Then came the death of the Duchess, and the five years separation of the War—two tragedies in a family so closely united.

The Situation in Sweden

IT sounded very high and mighty to be Duchess of Skania, and wife of the heir-presumptive to a throne, but no one in England realised the difficulties that surrounded Princess May when she arrived in Sweden. Her mother-in-law (the then Crown Princess) was born a Princess of Baden; her grandmother-in-law, Queen Sophie, was born a Princess of Nassau. The training of German princesses in the days when there were German kings, princes and courts led them to realise the dignity rather than the responsibility of their position. Princess May had been trained to consider her responsibility as greater than her dignity.

THE LATE CROWN PRINCESS OF SWEDEN

Whose deeply-lamented death took place last week. "Princess May," as she then was, married the Crown Prince of Sweden (then Duke of Scania) fifteen years ago. She was the elder daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught and leaves five children

Her mother-in-law, the present Queen of Sweden, spent the greater part of the year out of the country, Queen Sophie was Nassau of Nassau, good, but German. The situation called for the exercise of the greatest tact, for although the then Crown Princess spent most of her time with her mother, the Grand Duchess of Baden, or in Italy, she was jealous of her position in Sweden. Princess May met these two German influences with a disarming friendliness and duty. And whilst avoiding any collision of interests or overstepping the German protocol of these two ladies, she took her own line—the line of the English Royal Family—of helping every cause that concerned the welfare of the Swedish people.

In the future Sweden may have cause to deplore her untimely death even more sadly than it does to-day. She was a wise woman, and her husband leant upon her judgment. There are dark clouds in Scandinavia, and when the Swedish Socialists speak of our dead Princess as "Margaret the Good" we can realise what her influence would have been if she had been spared to share the throne.

BARE backs are going out of fashion for evening gowns. The post-war excitement is dying down, and Fashion has decreed that female shoulder-blades and female understandings—as far as the ankle—are to be covered up. And the chaperon is gradually creeping back. But this is not at the dictate of Fashion. It is in response to the clamour of Man.

the clamour. No. 1. Boredom. No. 2. Pocket.

The ultra-modern dance meant that you jazzed, fox-trotted, etc., etc., the whole evening with one girl. Probably she had taken you to the dance as "partner." She was all on her own, there was no one with whom you could "deposit" her as in old days, and you couldn't possibly leave her standing in the middle of the floor, or planted up against the wall. That wasn't "cricket"—hence Boredom grew.

When the dance was over, knowing that your partner for the evening had no one to look after her, the obvious thing, the only thing, was to offer to "drop" her at her home—an offer always accepted with alacrity. Taxi-fares are taxi-fares and 50 per cent. besides, and a whopping tip, or bribe, according to the hour. Even Sir Galahad, or any of the other knights of romance, would jib.

Chaperons prevent boredom, and are responsible for the conveyance of their charges to their domiciles. Men likewise are beginning to feel that since women have the vote and claim a sex-equality they

Matters Ducal

A RUMOUR is running round the town that a Duke, who was divorced some little time ago, and whose erstwhile Duchess has since married a commoner, will shortly be entering the bonds of matrimony again. There have been religious difficulties, I believe, but it is said that a visit to Rome has removed them. The question all the world is asking now is, "If the Duke does marry will his former Duchess continue to use the title or take the name of her new husband, or will she say, 'Once a Duchess always a Duchess,' and stick to it?"

If she does, it will be most annoying for Duchess No. 2, and she can't be prevented from doing so by law. That question was fixed by the decision of the Law Courts in the action brought by the late and very-much-married Earl Cowley against his first wife, who had divorced him. The Court said she had every right to call herself Countess Cowley, and she did until the end of her days, although she was married to a Mr. Biddulph, and she had more than one successor beneath the Cowley coronet. So, perhaps, we shall see two Duchesses of the same name, unless the lady who obtained the divorce and has re-married puts her Christian name before the title, like a peer's widow. That would be funny.

Commander Kenworthy

THE Parliamentary reporters are very rarely at fault, but they persistently refuse his rank and degree to that bubbling, corksome question-asking Member of the Commons, Commander Kenworthy, R.N. In the due course of nature this gentleman will be a peer—none other than my Lord Strabolgi. Not a pretty title, certainly, but one resurrected from the mists of time in favour of his father, who proved to the satisfaction of the proper authorities that he was the lineal descendant of the last Baron Strabolgi, who died in thirteen hundred and something. So Commander Kenworthy, M.P., is really Commander the Hon. Joseph Kenworthy, M.P., R.N.

The Opera

WE all talk very lightly about the effect of high prices and increased taxation, but the list of subscribers to the opera season at Covent Garden points a finger to the actuality of things. There are some 150 subscribers, headed by the King and Queen, the Princess Royal, and Princess Helena Victoria. Beyond some twenty or thirty names of folk in the monde, the rest are comparatively unknown. Times change; money fails—but the opera will be just as crowded as ever. All the same, there are differences.

POLITICS: TRADE UNIONS AND EX-SERVICE MEN

BY "FITZWILLIAM"

About eighteen months ago we were all rather fond of talking of "a land fit for heroes to live in" and of "a new heaven and a new earth." Neither earth, nor, so far as we know, heaven, shows much sign of change, but of one thing we are sure, and that is that public feeling cannot tolerate the present situation of demobilised soldiers and sailors, whether disabled or not. It is impossible to allow an ex-combatant to remain unemployed if he is willing to work. That is what Earl Haig had in mind the other day at Bristol, when he asked help of the Trade Unions. Now Lord Methuen comes forward with a shocking statement of facts. He quotes a number of cases: the Amalgamated Society of Engineers, the Clock and Watch-Makers' Union refusing to train the disabled; the Electrical Trades Union refusing ex-sailors as wiremen; the leather-workers taking only one disabled man per 1,000 members! the ironmoulders of Leeds refusing disabled men aged over sixteen. (There are none younger!) The Unions dispute the facts, but they are certainly true in part.

Now, it is quite easy to grow hot over this, to rave at the Trade Unions, to suggest that their members drew high wages while the soldiers died, and to seek German gold in their attitude. But, in the first place, that is not true; in the second place, it leads us no nearer to the solution of the difficulty. Trade Unionists are neither more nor less loyal and kindly than other sorts of men. They went to the front in hundreds of thousands, and fought like the rest. Those who stayed at home were wanted at home; otherwise the comb would have secured them. Their sons and brothers lie dead in France. There is no reason to think that they are hostile to the sons and brothers who survived. If the Trade Unions repel the soldier, it is for definite reasons, which we must understand if we are to solve the problem.

The Trade Unions say, briefly, this: "We have struggled for nearly a century to establish in our trade conditions enabling us to live decently. We have kept up our wages to subsistence level. We have conquered leisure. We have protected our members against unjust dismissal. During the War we set aside our rules for our country's sake. We allowed the dilution of our skilled men by newly trained people who had not been through our system of apprenticeship. We allowed ourselves to be speeded-up beyond what we think a fair day's work. Well, the War is won. Now you ask us to flood our ranks with men who might not have entered them if there had been no War, men who will by competition cause unemployment, and, therefore, will cause wages to be cut. We refuse."

I do not myself agree with this view. I think it would be more gallant of the Unions to accept the soldiers as members and trust to the demand for commodities to keep up wages. I think the attitude ungenerous, but there it is, and we shall do no good by ignoring it. It is no use once more appealing to the Unions; their members are hard-headed, and what they have said they have said. It would be more dignified for us to let the Unions alone, and to set to work to pay our debt to the men who won the War. The first thing to do is to complete the training of the youths and the disabled. This can be done without the help of the Unions, for there are plenty of non-unionist workmen and small masters who are capable of acting as instructors. Since the Government is already willing to pay for the training, there should be no difficulty.

If we assume that by this means we obtain a trained force of ex-service workers, the next step is to reserve for them all the industrial work that is being performed in the national arsenals and dockyards. There we find employment for many thousands. I shall be told, "If you do that the other workers will strike." Perhaps they will, but it is our business to face strikes; in such a cause we have no choice. Moreover, one of two situations must exist: either there are not many unemployed ex-service men, and the cry is empty; or there are a good many, and with them we can face the Unions. My own belief is that if such a course is pursued the Unions will realise that they cannot stand out, that they will admit the ex-service men as members and that peace will again prevail.

MEANDERINGS OF A MARTIAN, NO. 2.

"The Bystander's" Special Commissioner from Mars Visits OXFORD

SKETCHES BY HOWARD K. ELCOCK

"The first man with whom we spoke in Oxford"

I WISH you now to know that I have been to a city called Oxford, which, I am told, is the intellectual capital of a great Empire, and, as is only right in one who came but as a lowly stranger to its gates, I went into the place with reverence and awe. I did not doubt that all the people I should meet in the streets of the fountain of learning would have large, bulgy foreheads and cultured tones; but it did not so happen. I will tell you that the first man with whom we spoke in Oxford dropped his h's.

IN Mars, culture is radiated from our centres of learning along the ether waves, so that a Martian, who breathes for an hour or so the rarefied air of such places absorbs wisdom into his system unconsciously, and soon becomes a very knowing fellow indeed. But in coming near to Oxford you feel nothing to tell you that the air is highly charged with great enlightenment, although the very marshy state of the meadows about the city may give you the idea at first that the fountain of learning has overflowed its boundaries.

I WAS led to the city from its north side, and the first strange things I saw were the carriage sat the railway station. The Earthman whom I call my friend said they were hansom cabs of the Early Victorian era; and, though I am not sure that I have caught his meaning rightly, I judge that these cabs are a form of locomotion that are already extinct elsewhere. But I think I found much in Oxford that is already extinct elsewhere.

"Hansom cabs of the Early Victorian era"

I WAS first taken to see a wonder called the Martyrs' Memorial. My Earthman told me many things about it, so that I should know why it is wonderful, but much of his talk was strange to me; I gathered, however, that some people who lived long ago did not like the Martyrs, and so they burned them alive and had stone copies of them made to take their places. I was told that the Memorial had a sacred meaning, and was held by the citizens of Oxford to be a very solemn thing. Then I discovered hanging from the railings about the Memorial a large board, on which a piece of printed paper had been firmly stuck, and I read the print carefully, expecting it to be a call to all men to revere the memory of the Martyrs who had died for their faith. But it was not so. The print was a note from the City Fathers telling the people of Oxford how they could get a sure five per cent. for any money they might have saved. It was all a little strange to me.

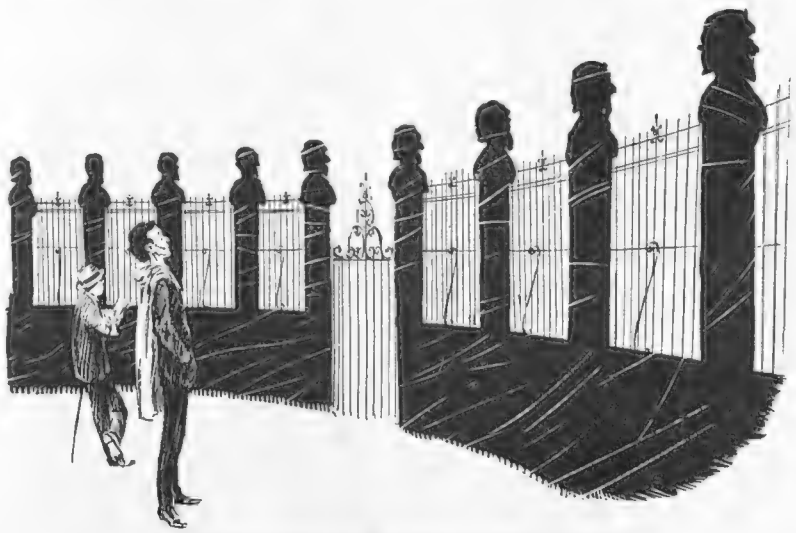
"The Martyrs' Memorial"

"A pompous old man . . . rode upon it in the middle of the High Street"

THE streets of Oxford, as far as I have been able to see them, are very good and smooth, so that many people ride about them on wheel-machines. So many machines! Most of them have only two wheels; but I saw one that had three wheels, and a pompous old man, who sat on a very solid basis, rode upon it in the middle of the High Street, and got in the way of the other coaches, so that the drivers of them said words to him in scorn and anger. I was told the old man was a parson, and I was surprised that in a city like Oxford a parson could be addressed in terms of such marked disrespect.

THERE are very many colleges in Oxford, but of them I can speak only as a chance visitor and not as a student, since I could but look at them with the wonder of a trusting child. On the doors of many rooms in these colleges I found the classes named by Latin words, so that it seemed to me that a student who did not know the Latin tongue might aim for the geography lecture and find himself landed in the realm of mixed mathematics. This is harder for me to understand, because my Earthman tells me that Oxford is a part of a land called England, and I know there is an English language, since with much pains I try to write in it now that I am on Earth. I think when, a few thousand years hence, our Martian historians are rummaging among the ruins and relics of an England that was, they will place it on record that fragments found in the great centre of English learning prove that England was never able to throw off the oppression of her Roman conquerors, and was not allowed to develop a language of her own.

"A spacious place called Christchurch"



"The boundary railing of this theatre is curiously supported"

MANY of the colleges are oddly named. One is called New College, although it is among the oldest of them; and another is called Braseriose, but I could not find out what it had done to be called such a spiteful name as that. I was taken to a spacious place called Christchurch, but the air inside it was not so sweet as the air of its quadrangle and its shaded walks, where the trees are green and the living grass abounds. In almost all the colleges I visited I was shown portraits of famous men who had been students there; but when I asked to be taken to these men I was told that they are all dead. So many dead! And, to judge by the faded air of the dim interiors of most of the colleges, you might suppose that their great dead had been buried in the immediate vicinity, and that not so very long ago.

THE MEANDERINGS OF A MARTIAN (concluded)

FROM the Martyrs' Memorial to Magdalen the illustrious dead dog your steps. I was taken to a place called the Sheldonian Theatre, from the upper parts of which I looked down upon a forest of spires and towers, and the old man who directed our view said it was a very beautiful sight. I tried to believe him, but to my eyes the view had more the air of a giant cemetery. The boundary railing of this theatre is curiously supported at intervals by pillars of stone, on the top of each of which is what may once have been the likeness of a huge human face. But the great faces are now battered and broken, as though in that very correct city of logic and learning it were only proper that its effigies should be dead as well.

AT Magdalen College my Earthman and I wandered pleasantly in the cloisters, where at least the air is fresh and good, and smells of life. Then we walked up a small and gloomy staircase, at the top of which a polite young man opened a door for us, and called me "Sir," as if I had been a person of distinction. Also, he thanked me very much for no reason that I could see. When I asked my Earthman why this had been done, he replied that the young man was probably moved by anticipatory gratitude, but these words are too long for me to understand at present. I walked into a very large and beautiful room, and was reflecting deeply on the messages that seemed to flash at me from every angle, as if to hint that I had found the soul of Oxford at last, when the young man came to me and began to talk. I will try to set down the words as he said them, though many of them are new to me:

"YES, sir. This is Magdalen College Dining Hall. You pronounce it Maudlen owing to the way it is spelt in the old parchments. Thank you, sir. The panelling is all fifteenth century work, and that is a portrait of Dr. Routh, and you will have noticed the fine oriel window on your right. Thank you, sir. That is a portrait of Addison, not the one that builds houses, but the real one, though I forget for the moment what he did besides being a student here. Thank you, sir. At that table, just to the left of where you are standing, the present Prince of Wales used to take his meals, and that painting in front of you is a genuine Italian portrait of the real Magdalene—you pronounce it just as it is spelt, Mag-da-lene. Thank you, sir." I was glad at that moment that my Earthman came up and gave the young man a piece of money, so that I was able to resume in silence my train of thought, which did not run at all on the lines the young man seemed to think necessary.

AND by and by I was taken to the tow-path by the Folly Bridge to see the barges on the river. So many barges! I was struck by the resemblance of some of them to pictures I have seen of English ships of war of a thousand years ago, and I told my Earthman, in my ignorance of these things, that I supposed this was the Oxford Navy, since in antiquity the ships seemed to match the cab service of the city very well. But my friend shook his head and said they were only boats from which the youth of the place watched the prowess of their fellows on the river with oar and paddle.

AND yet I had thought that the ships were so far out of date that they would commend themselves as an ideal Navy to the City Fathers of Oxford, who seem to spend their lives in looking back to yesterday for a vision of to-morrow. I think we order these things better in Mars, though, since I speak as a stranger among you, I say it with proper deference.

MARY ROSE

AT THE HAYMARKET

By "JINGLE" Illustrated by MACMICHAEL

THIS is another of Sir James Barrie's delicate fancies, though it seems to me to call for special qualifications in the spectator who would fain rise to its rather giddy heights; and I do not feel sure that I am such a gifted person as that. To begin with, I am not a Scotsman, I do not say it boastfully—and I am not so psychic that anybody would notice it. I am also lamentably lacking in a sixth sense, and I can make no claim to second sight. I apologise for these purely personal details, which in the ordinary way can have no sort of interest for the reader, but at the same time it seems only fair in a case of this sort to begin with what controversialists call a definition of terms. The germ of the play is the natural longing of every mother for the day when the baby boy on her knee will be grown up and able to take her on his knee instead, but most mothers, I think, keep the hope of this miracle to themselves as one that is too sacred for discussion. And we are led to this beautiful ending by way of the weirdness and spookery of the land of dreams.

THE first scene is one that, it seems to me, must have called for some courage to mount in these times. It is nothing less than a House to Let. The caretaker says that the house is haunted; but then they all say something of that sort in the hope of being able to scare away likely tenants. It happens, however, that Harry, a sturdy young soldier with the Australian Forces, is not looking at the place with a view to occupation. Long ago it was the home of Mr. and Mrs. Morland, his mother's parents; and for a while, too, it was his home as well. So he has come to take a look at the old place as a matter of sentiment before going back to the Antipodes. And seeing that he is a member of the family that once lived in the house, the mournful caretaker goes away to make him a cup of tea; while Harry sits in a broken old chair and lets his thoughts run wild.

THE next scene puts the clock back thirty years or so. It is the home of the Morlands as it used to be. Mr. and Mrs. Morland are an amiable, middle-aged couple, who have just received the news that their only daughter, Mary Rose, has had an offer of marriage from Simon Blake, a promising young officer of the mercantile marine. Mr. Morland is ready to consent; but there is something about Mary Rose that Simon ought first to be told. When she was about twelve years old he took her to an island in the Outer Hebrides for a fishing excursion. One day he left her sketching the landscape while he went in pursuit of the usual large fish that always gets away. When he came back a little later, Mary Rose was gone. Search was made everywhere without success. A month later, Mr. Morland, roaming about the island, hoping against hope, was surprised to find Mary Rose sketching quietly where he had left her, and quite oblivious of the fact that she had been away at all.

THIS is a nice, eerie little mystery that comes with convenient appropriateness at a time when everybody is rat-tatting at the door-knocker of spirit-land, and protesting the genuineness of photographs of things that are not there. The plain prosaic man might be tempted to ask how Mary Rose got on for her bread-and-butter during that month, but you mustn't take any notice of sceptics and scoffers like that. What happened was that the spirits of the island saw in Mary Rose one of themselves, and as the poet puts it, she saw a hand you cannot see that beckoned her away. Wonderful what excuses the girls will think up, isn't it?

THE scene then changes to the island in question so that you may see for yourself that all the cards are on the table, and that there is nothing up anybody's sleeve. Mary Rose and her husband, Simon Blake, come to the island on a visit. They have been married four years, which, I suppose, is a pretty good while, as things go to-day. Their idea is to have a picnic on the island and then return to the mainland where their little son of three awaits them with his nurse. We now learn that in the folk-lore of the district the island is something more than the piece of land surrounded by water which is all the geography book claims for it. It is a sentient thing with a Gaelic name that implies that it feels happy when people visit it; and it is calling always to the souls that are great enough to hear its message. While her husband's back is turned for a moment, there come into the air sounds of gentle music and appealing voices which Mary alone can hear. And as one in a pleasant dream she walks slowly in the direction of the call that will not be denied, and is gone. Simon Blake, discovering her absence a moment later, runs hither and thither calling for her in a proper tone of anguish, but it isn't likely the spirits of the island are going to take any notice of a chap like that. Everybody knows what sailors are!

THEN an interval of something like twenty-five years passes away, and we find ourselves back once more in the home of the Morlands, as it used to be. Mary Rose has long since been mourned as dead. Her father and mother have got to the seventies, and Simon Blake himself is no longer young. He visits the old people regularly, because they form a pleasant link with the past; for although it is so long since Mary Rose disappeared he has never found another woman to take her place. And this evening Simon is with the old folks again; and while they are talking, a voice calls to him from the garden. There is not the least doubt of it; it is the voice of Mary Rose, who comes running on the scene as girlish and as light-hearted as ever. She has been with the voices on the island where Time is defied, and she comes back to her husband and her parents not a day older than when she was caught, as it were, in the masonic grip of her kindred souls. She is shocked to find her husband so old; but her great concern is for her baby boy. In search of him she runs wildly through the house, but we who are wiser know that in thirty years even a baby boy is liable to change his spots, like the Ethiopian, or whatever it is.

THEN we go back to the scene from which we started, and most people will probably agree that if the house isn't haunted by this time it jolly well ought to be. There is Harry still dreaming in his chair, and we find, on the authority of the caretaker who now brings the promised tea, that she has left him for not more than ten minutes. All that has happened in the interval has been a reconstitution of the past with the fanciful chronology of dreamland, and we see now why the house is haunted. Mary Rose is still looking for her baby boy, and cannot rest till she finds him. And after the stage and the house have been properly darkened to ensure the right kind of creepy feeling, Mary Rose comes to Harry and identifies him as her boy, and is duly taken by him on his knees in accordance with plan and specification herein. After that, the music and the voices, which have obligingly shifted down from the Outer Hebrides to a place in Sussex, summon Mary Rose once again, and she answers the call for what I suppose is the last time. In any case it must be satisfactory to all associated with this enterprise to know that the ghost is likely to walk regularly for many months to come. The play was obviously not written for Philistines like myself, but it will doubtless have a very successful career. Miss Fay Compton's triumph as Mary Rose is everywhere acclaimed. JINGLE

"BELLE JOURNÉE D'ÉTÉ," BY CAMILLE LAMBERT

THE BYSTANDER IN PARIS

"DISCOVERIES." Illustrated by MARCEL PONCIN

MES AMIS—

LAST week I made the wonderful discovery that the great difference between Paris and London was that here in Paris there are chairs on which to sit down. There are chairs for a penny, and chairs for tuppence, and chairs for the price of a bock, innumerable chairs, comfortable chairs, ubiquitous chairs. Since I wrote of them there seem to be more than ever, for as the season advances they spread themselves further and further.

NOW this week I have made another wonderful discovery. I have discovered the great difference between the English people and the French people. That is a subject on which I have thought for a long time, and which I have very often discussed in the café, where we are all philosophers and students of the human race, perhaps most in the feminine. But though I have thought much, I would never have made the discovery if it had not been for the visit to Paris of the cousins of my mother who is English.

Flute! I don't think they read THE BYSTANDER—it is too clever for them—so I can tell the story of my discovery. They are of an age, these cousins of my mother, at which one begins to believe women have some sense. It is a mistake ever to believe that. One compliments them too much, though there are some who make a very good camouflage. But I depart from my story. It is to these ladies that I owe my discovery.

MY mother has said to me: "Philippe, since the War is finished you have had nothing to do"—She considers my writing as nothing to do. "Always I know you have a success with the pretty girls"—she is a flatterer that English mother of mine—"now go and do your duty and have a success with my cousins. Give them a good time. Amuse them."

Mon Dieu! How I have worked. We have made the visits of the Louvre and the Luxembourg and the Cluny and the Invalides, and we have gone up the Tour Eiffel and the Arc de Triomphe, and visited Versailles and Malmaison. It has been a Cook's tour, and I, I have been the conductor. After four days my discovery has begun. I have taken my party of Cooks to a very respectable restaurant. But in England, you know, I do not believe they drink even the pinard I have ordered for them. It has been a disaster veritably. The fault I maintain was my mother's. They have called me beautiful cousin and then, Oh, then! they have suggested that because I was a Frenchman I must be very wicked.

Encore Flute! I have told to them how respectable I was, and then Cousin Christabel, who has drunk at least two glasses of the Saint Emilion, whispered, "But just for once, cousin Philippe, we would like to see one of these wicked cafés and places—Maximes or somewhere."

"At the church parade"

"Though you come to look, remember you will be looked at"

OF that part of the history I will not tell more. To some people Duvals would seem wicked if one told them it was. But we shall go to the respectable quarters of the Avenue du Bois. It was the next day we went there, and that next day was a Sunday. They had said how they would like to see what they called Church parade. I had forgotten that it was in the least connected with the church, but, of course, we went.

SUDDENLY it was there I made my discovery. We had seated ourselves on tuppenny chairs, and were watching the passing monde and the demi-monde. Cousin Charlotte had a brilliant idea. For a minute she had stared at a girl who was passing—I also had been interested. "But why do they walk up and down?" she said.

COUSIN CHARLOTTE is innocent, Cousin Charlotte bores me, and sometimes I do not take the trouble to answer her silly questions. I began quite lazily, but when I had spoken I knew it was inspiration—the fruit of five days of boredom. This is what I said: "French people like to be looked at and admired. That is why they walk up and down in their prettiest clothes. English people like to sit and look. That is why they never trouble to look pretty themselves—at least, when they come to Paris."

PERHAPS you think it is not much that little statement. But I, I think it is wonderful, because, by Jove, yes, it is true. Since how many years what has it been, our Paris?—a peep show for the English and the Americans. They come to look. Often they want to look where no French people go. Everywhere they are looking with their monocles, and their big horn-rimmed glasses that make them look like owls. In the Avenue du Bois on Sunday, in the cafés, in the restaurants, at the theatres, everywhere they are always looking. They believe that they are broadening their minds because they open their eyes the wider to stare. And while they are so busy looking they never think how they themselves look. That might broaden their minds.

"Their monocles and big horn-rimmed glasses"

WHEN a French girl is quite little she is taught to walk well, and not to put her feet down as if she should have only one object — to go somewhere in a hurry. Watch her dress. A French girl dresses to please both herself and those who look at her. She likes to be admired when she is looked at, which is better than to be content to be regarded as a freak.

YOU must not think that I do not like English girls. When I marry I shall certainly marry an English girl, because that is a tradition in our family. They are most fun and they are most honest. For the rest, as for instance in conversation, one can succeed if one is patient to teach them to speak of something else than just that so and so is awfully nice and such and such a place is ripping. Au fond, one admits the English are admirable. It is their character that counts. PHILIPPE.

OUR GREAT AFRICAN FLIGHT.—IV.

DESCRIBED BY "THE BYSTANDER'S" TAME PROFESSOR.

TO-DAY, with ill-concealed satisfaction, we record the downfall of three of our rivals. The Evening Post machine has crashed badly at Arigogo; the Caretaker monoplane has fallen down a volcano at Bunt; while the Prattler biplane (No. 2) has inadvertently arrived at Jerusalem, and is thereby disqualified. Without wishing in any way to crow over fallen competitors, we can only say that these adventurers have brought their misfortunes on themselves. They must have known, when they conceived their ill-starred attempts, that the only paper appointed by Destiny to be the pioneer in any kind of "stunt," particularly a flying stunt, is THE BYSTANDER, and, therefore, we believe they richly deserve their fate. Our only regret is that the Evening Post and Prattler machines did not, like the Caretaker, fall into a volcano.

Meanwhile, our own monoplane—or biplane, whichever it is—goes on from strength to strength. The propeller, we gather, has been recovered, and has been firmly attached to the machine. The aviators have passed through appalling perils on their way to their resting-place at Buddleboo, but it is clear that they remain undaunted. The laconic phrase in Professor Clump's despatch, "I was enabled, however, to light my pipe," will stand for all time in the annals of British heroism as the voice of that unconquerable spirit which has made our country what she is—a nation of pipe-lighters.

PROF. CLUMP'S DESPATCH

BUDDLEBOO, April 1.—We have arrived here after rather a trying journey, which painfully illustrated the discomforts of travelling in tropical regions. I happened to light my pipe while we were passing over a pineapple forest. My hay-fever has been acute lately, as we are in the heart of the hay-fever belt; the pollen from the pine-apple pistils is peculiarly irritating, and produced a violent attack of sneezing, which caused me to drop a lighted match into the forest. The inflammable pineapples were immediately inflamed, so much so that they caught fire, and the forest was very soon in a blaze. We were travelling at the time at least twenty miles an hour, the engine running beautifully. The flames, however, travelled about sixty miles an hour, and the atmospheric suction caused by the exploding pineapples compelled us to fly through the heart of the blaze. The heat was terrific, and it is not too much to say that I sweated. I was enabled, however, to light my pipe without the expenditure of further matches.

As I write I can hear the weird cry of the African wood-louse calling to its mate.

POLO AND ITS PLAYERS

BRIGHT PROSPECTS FOR THE GALLOPING GAME

A Fine Revival

A YEAR ago we were wondering how long it would take for polo to be brought back to its former prosperity. You will not need to be reminded of the severe blow which the game received by the outbreak and prolongation of the War. Of all branches of sport polo probably suffered most. There was no question of "carrying on." Practically every polo player was, or became, a soldier, and the game had to be completely suspended from the days of mobilisation until last summer. The London grounds opened as usual in 1919, and, considering that only a small proportion of our mounted troops were home again, the revival proved amazingly successful.

A POWERFUL HITTER
Lord Rocksavage, one of England's best on last season's form

Players and Ponies

PONIES, of course, were very scarce, especially those with any experience of the game, yet a number of players were splendidly mounted. Mr. W. S. Buckmaster showed what could be done by enterprise and assiduous schooling. The resuscitation of the game found him with none of his old ponies, but he picked up a few promising ones here and there, and trained them with his accustomed skill. The result was that he was brilliantly carried in the chief tournaments by Catch 'Em Alive, Peg o' My Heart, Miss Anzac, Hello, and Marcia, and when these five were sold at the end of the season they made the splendid aggregate of 2,220 gs. Lord Rocksavage, too, was carried magnificently by Mannequin, Boveto, and Pavlova. Sir John Ramsden produced a grand stud. Lord Stalbridge was able to bring out his old ponies, and, in one way and another, at least a dozen players were almost as well mounted as they had been before the War.

Big Mounts or Small?

THE suspension of the height limit for ponies, which looks like becoming permanent, allowed players a greater scope in selecting their mounts, though, as a matter of fact, one did not observe a specially large increase of big ponies. The truth is that the bigger the pony the less handy he usually is, and players find themselves materially handicapped when they come to use horses of 15 hands or more in the galloping game. Thus the question of the height limit for ponies will settle itself automatically. The pony of 14 hands 2 inches or 14 hands 3 inches is the ideal mount for the game, and I do not think we need fear the wholesale introduction of bigger animals into polo.

The Price of Ponies

I HAVE devoted this attention to the pony side of the game because nobody who plays polo is likely to misjudge the value of a really good well-trained mount. We give great praise to our crack players, but sometimes not enough credit is rendered to the ponies. You cannot wonder that rich players are willing to give almost any sum within reason for a really first-class pony, for if his owner can ride him to advantage the difference such a pony will make in the player's value in the game is incalculable. I am quite prepared to see ponies fetching bigger prices than ever this summer, for there is an inevitable dearth of the best material.

A Sense of Patriotism

We are likely to have a number of American players in this country this year, and you may be sure that they will pick up likely ponies where they can. There is nothing to prevent the Americans buying good ponies from dealers and players whom they can tempt to sell to them. The current rates of exchange will enable them to give higher prices than have ever been known in this country. But I think a sense of patriotism will deter many owners from exchanging their best ponies for the almighty dollar. At least they will give the newly-formed Hurlingham Defence Committee the first refusal of those mounts. This Committee has been established with a view to securing the best possible English team and the best possible ponies, so that we may make an adequate resistance when our good friends representing the American Polo Association come over to endeavour to win back the International Cup in 1921.

GETTING HIS HAND IN
Good practice for player and pony

The Defence Committee

Under the chairmanship of Major-General John Vaughan, the Committee knows its job. Its members include Mr. Buckmaster, Colonel Hobson, Brig.-General Hardress Lloyd, Lieut.-Colonel H. F. Wickham, Major Barrett, Major Lockett, and Colonel E. D. Miller—all practical men, with a vast experience of first-class polo. If they cannot secure the best players and the best ponies, we may well despair of ever evolving an efficient polo organisation. You will recall that England regained the Cup in 1914 after very gallant

Photographs Central News
WELL-KNOWN PLAYERS HAVE THEIR FIRST KNOCK OF THE SEASON

Our illustrations on this page were taken last week on Major Cecil Peters's private ground at Sunbury, where a number of players have availed themselves of the opportunity of practice with stick and ball but ineffectual efforts had been made by teams captained by General Lloyd and Captain Ritson, respectively. Of our victorious side, Major Leslie Cheape was killed in the War—an irreparable loss to British polo. Colonel Tomkinson, Major Barrett, and Major Lockett remain.

Our Next Team

THESE three are not so young as they were, but youth does not count for everything in polo. On the contrary, the best players are over thirty, and quite a number in the front rank will never see forty again. Thus I think the old brigade will form the nucleus of England's next International side. Of Colonel Tomkinson we saw nothing in London polo last summer, but he will be playing again this year, and it will not be easy to find a surer striker or a neater horseman at No. 1. Major Barrett has all the arts of the game at his fingers' ends. His manipulation of the ball is wonderful. Last season he played in most tournaments on ponies with which he had had no previous opportunity of becoming acquainted, and he did some wonderful work on them.

A Great Player

I IMAGINE that Major Lockett is pretty sure of his place in the next International side. See him in a moderate game and you will be rather puzzled to know how he has acquired his great reputation. But watch him in a big tournament tie, when there is really something depending upon it. You will not then be slow to realise his eminence in the game. At his best, Major Lockett is one of the greatest players we have yet seen. He often takes risks by riding far up into the game, but in doing so he has confidence in his No. 3 as well as in himself, and you usually perceive his dashing tactics yield the right result. I am not fortunate enough to have seen the matches at Meadow Brook in 1914, but those who were there tell me that Major Lockett was superb. All were good, but he and Cheape did specially mighty work for England in those matches.

An Interesting Question

IT was lately a point of discussion whether Barrett or Lockett will make the better England captain. Knowing the brilliant capabilities of the two players, and having watched their respective powers of leadership in many a hard-fought game, I strenuously decline to be drawn into any controversy on this subject, which is said lately to have agitated the Hurlingham powers. I hold that the point is one which General Vaughan and his Committee are eminently capable of settling. They have provisionally elected Major Lockett for the job.

AN INTERNATIONAL CAPTAIN
Major Vivian Lockett, who has been appointed to lead the England Team

A Look Round

AND now for a look round to see which other players will be available for the International trial games, which are to be a feature of the season now beginning. I do not suppose that we can put Mr. Buckmaster as a live candidate for the matches against America. You see, nearly two decades have passed since he helped England to beat the U.S.A. at Hurlingham, and he rightly thinks that younger men can now be found for the job. "Buck" last season appeared to be playing just as well as ever, and had the satisfaction of leading a team once more to victory in the Champion Cup. He will be the best "trial horse" possible for the International preliminaries.

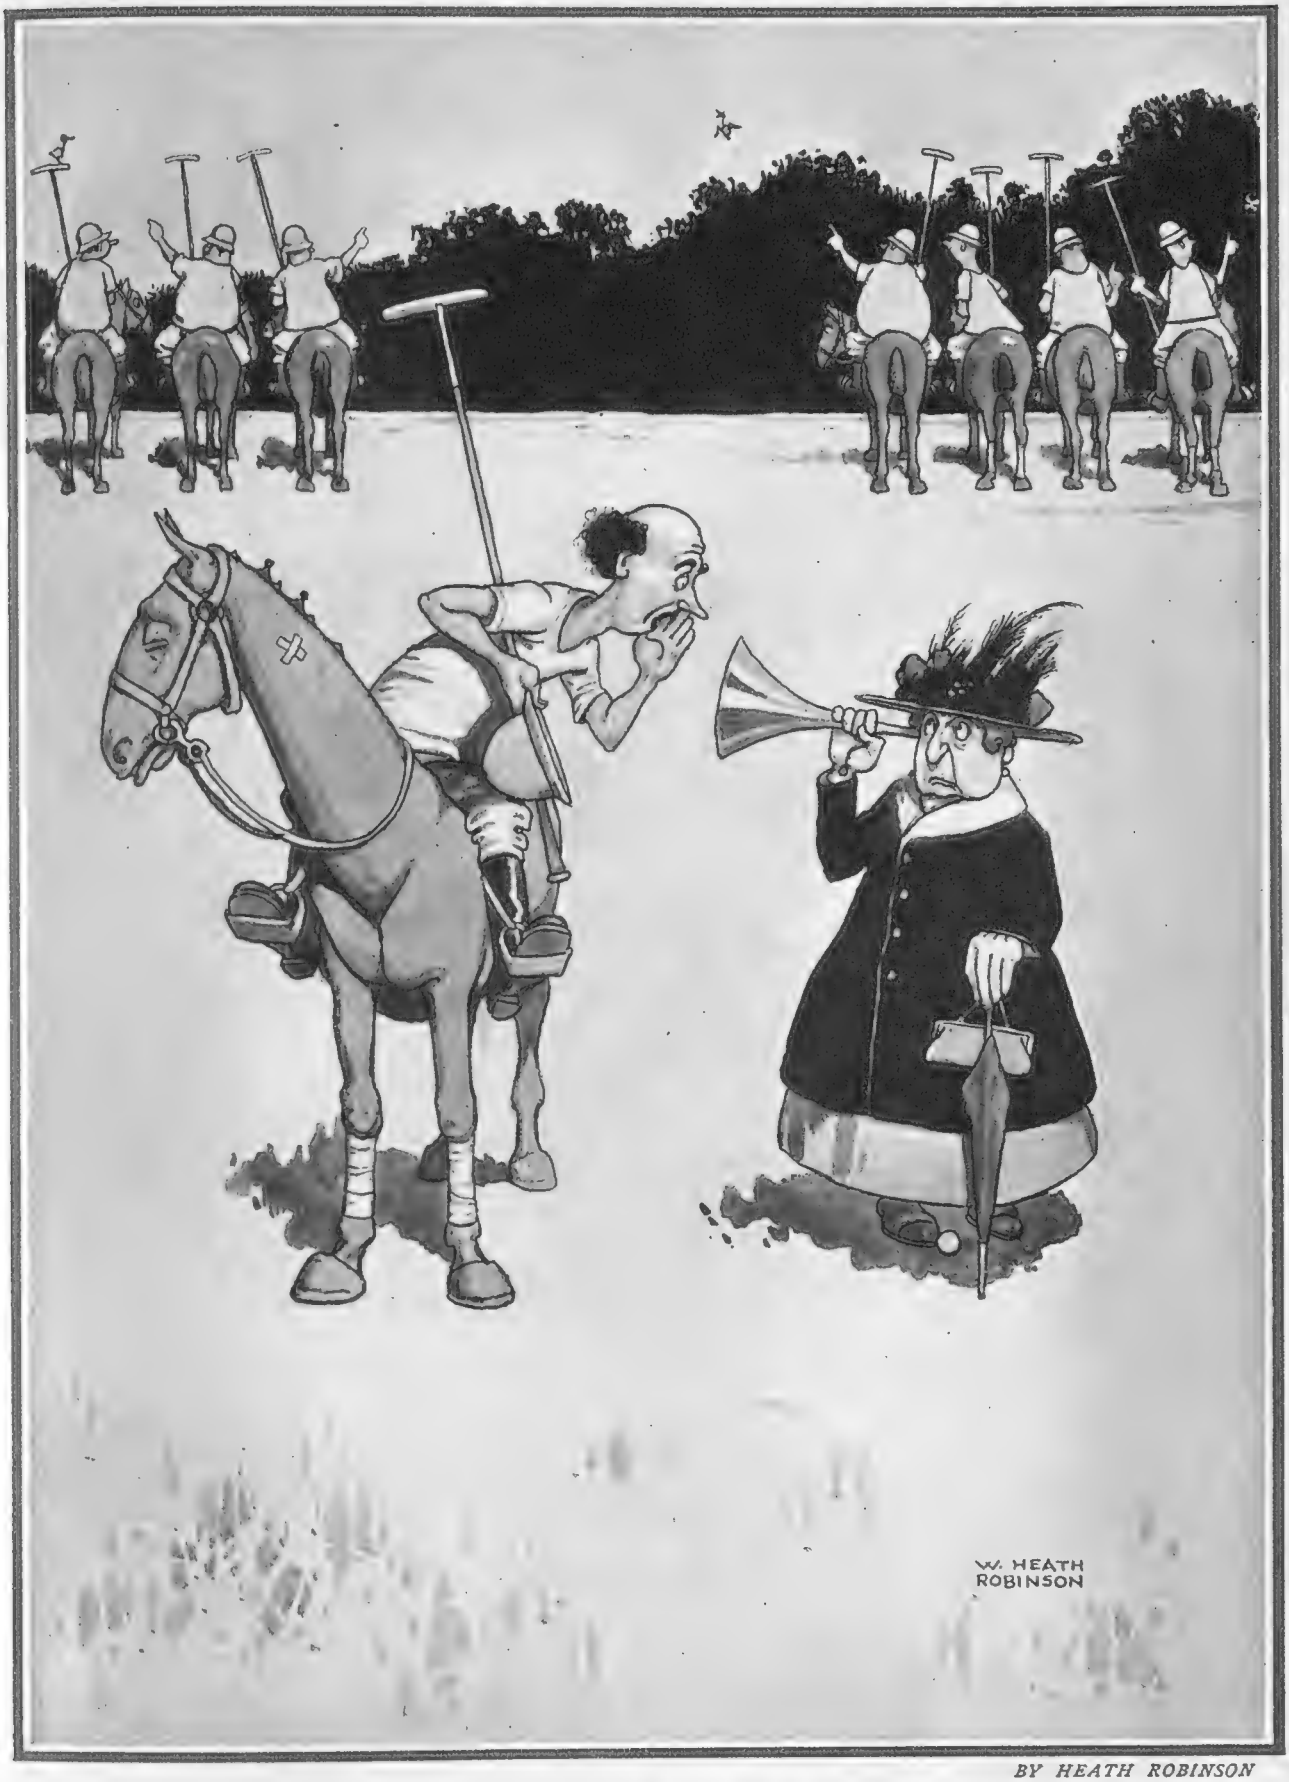
Unfortunate Predicament—



BY HEATH ROBINSON

—Of Modest Young Poloist

MULO! L. R. Brightwell

It has been proposed to meet the shortage of Polo ponies with ex-Army mules

England's Eligibles

Lord Rocksavage was highly successful in London polo last summer. Helped appreciably, no doubt, by his exquisite ponies, he showed pronounced improvement upon his pre-war form, and put up several delightful exhibitions of hard true hitting. But International polo is polo of a peculiarly strenuous type. Its active participants have to be hard-bitten, extraordinarily resourceful, and able to go at topmost pace from the throw-in until the bell announces the close. It throws an immense strain on the players. We have not yet seen Lord Rocksavage subjected to that strain, but his ability is unquestionable. We shall not be badly off for backs. Besides those I have already mentioned there is Major "Jack" Harrison, and several others who are first-class in defence. We need, however, good forwards, and I think we must look to the Army to supply them next year, as in the past, Major Hurndall is brilliant in the attack, and is sure to come in to the reckoning, while Mr. Ivor Buxton is a greatly improved player. Both these men are smart goal hitters from all sorts of angles, an invaluable asset in any team. General Vaughan's Committee will be keenly on the look-out for brilliant forwards this summer.

The Inter-Regimental

Perhaps the Army will have one or two surprises for us in this direction. Regimental polo was of a very fragmentary description in this country last year. Its full talent was by no means disclosed. We never saw, for example, the 17th Lancers, who played a certain amount of polo in Germany on any mounts they could muster. Their regimental team will comprise this summer Lieut.-Colonel T. P. Melvill, Captain H. B. Turnor, Major V. Lockett and Captain B. C. Boles. This is an exceedingly warm combination, as they showed in India before the War. On their old rating, they have a total handicap of 32 points, and it is obvious they will not be an easy side to beat when the Army Championship comes round. Much, of course, will depend upon whether they will be able to get together an adequate stud of ponies.

Army Teams

The 13th Hussars should be tolerably well-mounted, and they can boast some young players of promise, notably Mr. Ormrod and Captain Hind. The 9th Lancers still have some of their old players, while the 12th Lancers possess the makings of a team which will not discredit the great polo reputation of that regiment. The 15th Hussars will, of course, miss Major Barrett, but Colonel Bingham and

The "WARNEFORD" Patent RUG ATTACHMENT
For HORSES and CATTLE.

EVERY HORSEMASTER knows that the old-fashioned method of rugging a horse is most unsatisfactory. The use of a surcingle or roller—which has to be tightly pulled up if the rug is to be retained in position at all—is the cause of most of the white patches by the withers—often erroneously described as saddle marks—but which, in reality, are caused by the continuous pressure exerted on the spine by the surcingle.

¶ In addition to the great discomfort which the horse must experience, particularly after a drink and feed, there is the constant danger of galling and injury by kicking when the rug slips back.

¶ The "WARNEFORD" Patent RUG ATTACHMENT exactly meets all requirements; it retains the rug in position whether the animal is standing, lying down, rolling, or if turned out for weeks at a stretch and with an entire absence of pressure on the spine, the horse is cosy, comfortable, and safe.

¶ It will be seen that the attachment takes up the rug on both shoulders, joins up on the breast, and then passes between the forelegs under the animal with side extensions to the rug.

¶ The ATTACHMENT is supplied with standard rugs, or may be adjusted to own rugs and to fit any size horse or pony.

¶ There are two types of attachment—SINGLE or EXTENDED, the latter secures the rug well down under the belly and prevents it blowing up from the hind quarters.

QUOTATIONS FOR SPECIAL RUGS OR COLOURED ATTACHMENTS FOR RACING, OFFICERS' STABLES, Etc.

¶ Own rugs fitted and returned immediately.

N.B.—The Attachment is for all Horses, Ponies or Cattle, whether in stable, train, ship, bivouac, field, polo ground or paddock.

Hurlingham Changes

THE London clubs are making full preparations for a busy season. Hurlingham has shown plenty of enterprise and taken the important step of enlarging its famous match-ground. This is now considerably wider at its goal-lines than was formerly the case. The improvement has meant a great deal of work during the winter, but it will be greatly appreciated by players, and comes opportunely for the International matches next year. Lord Haig is still the chairman of the Hurlingham Polo Committee, the governing body of the sport, and takes the keenest interest in the advancement of a game in which he was once a very conspicuous figure. With Colonel Arthur Duff and Major Barrett in the management there is no fear of Hurlingham losing any of its prestige. They have provided a new clinker exercising ground for ponies, and a small covered school. Polo players were never better catered for at the senior club, All the old tournaments find a place once more in the Hurlingham programme, and the final tie of the Whitney Cup will be decided there this year.

Roehampton Attractions

POLO at Roehampton has been a great feature since the earliest days of the club, and though lawn tennis now enjoys so vast a popularity there, and its golf is excellent, too, yet we may be sure that the brothers Miller, notable polo-players themselves, are mindful that the interests of the galloping game shall not be neglected. On the contrary, Roehampton polo is likely to go on flourishing. Its two match grounds need fear no comparison, and its tournaments, such as the Roehampton Cup, the Public Schools Cup, and the Junior Championship, occupy an important position in the season's arrangements. I have watched the progress of the club since its earliest days, and am glad to see it reach the high-water mark of success. All this points to the favourable character of the polo outlook, and we may be sure that Ranelagh, too, with its Open Cup, its Coronation Cup, its County Polo Week, and its various regimental tournaments, will bear off its full share of the glories of the season.

Popularity of the Game

THOSE of us with many years' experience of London polo have seen it progress amazingly in popularity. We have seen its grounds multiply and its players increase to a remarkable extent, and we are quite convinced that its recovery from the set-back caused by the War will before long be complete. Those scores of keen players who fell in action can never be replaced. But their enthusiasm survives them, and a new generation of polo-players will in due course be competing for the honours of the game. It is manifest that only the fortunate few can take an active part in polo, but as a spectacle the game makes an ever widening appeal. Last season the Hurlingham Club several times threw open its gates to the general public, and it was pleasant to observe the deep interest with which the matches were followed.

"IN ENGLAND-NOW!"

A WEEKLY LETTER FROM "BLANCHE" ILLUSTRATED BY HELEN McKIE

LONDON, May 10, 1920

DEAR COUSIN—

NOTHING in the world, I've just been reading somewhere, is quite like Oxford in May. Go where you will, there is the green leaf and the bright blossom. . . . Lilac and double cherry, golden corcoris-japonica, the laburnum's "dropping-well of fire," the horse-chestnut's candles all alight. . . . The men who in olden times laid out its gardens and planned its college walls seem to have been in league with the goddess whose praise is sung from the top of Magdalen Tower. . . .

卐 卐

AND certainly there is a subtle something, a mysterious magic that must, surely, melt the hardest heart and reach the meanest imagination, in the marriage of spring, the embodiment of youth and life and colour, and those old, old grey walls which have sheltered, in all the glory of adolescence, so many who now are old, too, or who are no longer here to greet spring with us.

卐 卐

BUT the delight of May, "with its recurrent miracle," it doesn't need these contrasts—it's simply too deliriously lovely everywhere. In the country, of course, Paradise, but also here in London now a darling thing. And, climate or no climate—and when you say "climate" in England you never mean anything but "What a climate!" do you?—we've broken out into a veritable rash (and rash is the word in another sense, too) of those out-of-door relaxations that are mostly, I'm afraid, the privilege of the rich and leisured, and only a heart-aching dream to the poor and bread-winning busy.

卐 卐

HURLINGHAM, Roehampton, Ranelagh, the Park on golden afternoons, the river on silver evenings, Richmond, Kew, and the rest. . . . All easily available with a car and some vacant hours, not to speak of a well-filled note-case; but problems almost insoluble when office hours are from ten to six, and then you've got that tired (and dusty) feeling.

卐 卐

WAS a silly old Victorian, wasn't it, who talked of money as "filthy lucre" and otherwise maligned the magic power that makes the world worth living in? Just let them try it, those who don't know what it feels like, in May, to be shut away between four dingy walls eight hours of every day! And see how soon the bitterness of it will eat into their hearts and souls, the realisation that—

"Smart editors"

They are not long, the days of wine and roses:
Out of a misty dream
Our path emerges for a while, then closes
Within a dream. . . .

卐 卐

AS they say in that cleverly brilliant, lightly trenchant play on modern minds and manners, The Grain of Mustard Seed, at the Ambassadors, the whole art of politics is to deal with difficulties as they arise. But politics aren't life, are they?—far from it, if playing it is, as they also say in this political comedy, the greatest game in the world, "beyond gambling, beyond the love of women, beyond everything."

"The arrogance of minor ecclesiastics"

卐 卐

BUT, talking of work, s'pose even that greatest gift of the gods, leisure, must pall sometimes—though I'm afraid to such lengths I can't quite stretch my poor imagination! Anyway, when peeresses and duke's daughters take to editing papers—however light their duties, must do some work, I suppose? The field, too, into which the famous and lovely Lady Diana Manners (that was) has stepped is no esoteric one of souls, temperaments, or, as some one somewhat coarsely puts it, "innards."

卐 卐

WE aim, says the noble editor of Femina, only at reviewing all those forms of art by which man—and woman—have sought to make life more pleasant, to add grace to beauty, and to while away the long hours of the afternoon. . . . Fashion shall occupy us before everything . . . and to the clamorous cries of politicians, to the insidious whisperings of scientists, to the monotonous brayings of philosophers, we shall be deaf. Our motto with regard to all such serious gentlemen is, "Sack the lot."

卐 卐

CHARMINGLY removed, isn't it, from the great sweating, weary world that carries on with that working side of life, without which there couldn't be a "pleasant" one? And a slightly shamed admiration is our offering at the feet of this amusingly aristocratic and eminently ornamental new editorial pose. I mean, Labour and the War and all have forced upon us such utilitarian views of life. The purely decorative tends to smack almost of immorality.

卐 卐

AND "sacking the lot" (of scientists, politicians, and philosophers) sweeps away progress and such pedestrianism with such a delightfully careless hand. The Lord Chancellor doubts whether "the arrogance of the minor ecclesiastic," as shown in his present attitude to divorce reform, has ever been excelled. But even more sublime, methinks, is the supreme confidence of Beauty and all that thereto pertaineth: (And quite right, too, I think, don't you? Want something, after all, as relief from the Labour element.)

"Get you into the Enclosure at Ascot"

卐 卐

A PITY, though, that it costs a lot of money, isn't it?—being beautiful, I mean. As someone says, anyone can be good. But you've got to be rich, anyway, to keep beautiful, and a duchess confided to me the other day that if only she were a profiteer she'd be "Orested" too—and remain beautiful for ever, or nearly ever. Painful—the social power of money, isn't it? Won't unlock the gates of Heaven, I understand, but it'll certainly get you into the Enclosure at Ascot, and what more, after all, does one ask of this transitory life?

卐 卐

AFRAID we've all got so used to paying preposterous sums for our little rags of lace and chiffon, we shouldn't somehow feel dressed for a real party in "simplicities" these days. Judging, at any rate, by what I saw of "a little thing in organdi" or "a morning frock of linen" at a Lucile dress-show the other day, it doesn't really make much difference. Cost of labour, you see, which is what the dress people talk about every time you gasp at the poisonous price of everything, is much the same for one of those (so-called) "simple" frocks as for the other kind. Really shall be driven to something chaste in woad soon shan't we?

卐 卐

RATHER redolent of Money, by the way, isn't it? the list of subscribers to the Covent Garden Opera Season, which opens this week to the strains of Bohême and Tosca, Pelléas et Mélisande and I Pescatori di Perli? But blue blood, too (as well as the blouses of those—I gather—so musical ladies who haven't remembered to dress), can be met mostly in the stalls at Beecham Opera, and this summer, too, the King and Queen must give the Princess "a season." So it'll be noblesse oblige, and not the whole field left free to the genus profiteer, who, in any case, of course, prefers, say, Afgar. But il faut souffrire pour être . . . in even post-War Society.

卐 卐

APROPOS, it is to be a season, vide the last word in smart editors as aforesaid, "of surpassing brilliance and success—the season that we have all been longing for, the season which for years we hardly hoped to see, the first season of Peace." To many it will arrive with all the joy of something new and wonderful and exciting. To others it will come with what bitter pangs because of all those, some so very, very dear and once so near to us—

. . . who went
Ungrudgingly and spent
Their lives for us.

卐 卐

BUT the world's got to go on, and youth must be served, and they are so deeply asleep they cannot—which is our consolation—feel our bitter pain. And if we've got to pay for the horrid Hun's War may as well do it cheerfully. Latest news from that delightful country is, by the way, that they're feeling far from merry and bright. Meat and bread cards still, and everything fearfully dear and everyone's hand against his neighbours, and not so much as a cough lozenge allowed to be carried from one small state into another. After all, takes a lot of beating as a pied-à-terre, this little England, what, if we did lose the Peace and are badgered to desperation by brutal Budgets?

With love, yours ever, BLANCHE

Philip Faces Facts

BY J. B. MORTON

PHILIP LENNOX came home earlier than usual. He let himself in, and hung up his coat. He walked towards the drawing-room and opened the door. He did not move forward for some seconds, for the scene before his eyes was like some crude melodrama. Phyllis was sitting on the sofa, and next to her, with his arm round her, was a young man whom he had never seen. Philip was blessed with a keen sense of humour, and he was struck with the inadequacy of any words. There seemed to be nothing he could say which would fit the occasion. They sprang apart, as he came in, but their attitude was almost defiant. He was by far the most awkward of the three.

"How long has this been going on?" he said.

"A long time," said Phyllis.

"And in my own drawing-room," said Philip, and paused. "You might," he went on, "you might have had the decency to . . ."

Phyllis and the young man glared at him.

"I think," said Philip, "you had better go now."

"If he goes, I go with him," said Phyllis.

Philip considered the situation in silence. He had never faced facts. Never had it so much as entered his brain that he might one day lose her. She had seemed to be so happy and contented. What could it be? Surely he had treated her well, given her enough money, allowed her enough freedom.

"Will you leave us for a few minutes?" he said to the young man.

The young man looked at Phyllis, and she nodded. He got up and walked out into the hall. Philip braced himself.

"I think," he said, "we ought to talk this over."

"As you like," she said.

"You seem to have forgotten, completely forgotten, that you are married."

"I wish I could forget it. My life's been a little hell always."

"You never told me this. I thought you were so happy. Why didn't you speak of it?"

"You ought to have seen it for yourself. Everyone else has seen it long ago."

"But I did my best to make your life pleasant. Didn't I give you enough money?"

"As much as one expects in these days."

"And enough freedom?"

"I might have had more. I admit you tried, but you never understood."

"How long have you known this—this man?"

"For two years."

"Has he been here before?"

"No. But we have met in other places. I love him."

Philip set his teeth.

"What do you intend to do?"

"Go away with him, of course. He has asked me to do that. He's—he's wonderful."

"No doubt," said Philip, dryly. "But will nothing persuade you to change your mind? Can I hold out no inducement? Think what you are going to do. You're ruining your life. You'll lose your friends, and your self-respect. For God's sake, think well before you act in this way. It's awful. Can I say nothing that will touch you? You used to be so reasonable. You——"

"I have thought it all out carefully, and made my choice. I love him. He wants me. Why should I go on being wretched?"

"Very well," he said. "If you are determined to take this step, I suppose no amount of reasoning or arguing is any good."

"No good at all."

"Wait a minute. I will write a letter, and then you can go."

He passed his hand over his forehead. The full significance of the catastrophe began to dawn on him. He saw what life must be in the future. "It would happen at such a time," he said to himself. "I would have given all I possess to have avoided this. What am I to do?"

Then he drew a chair up to his writing-desk, and chose a pen.

"You will not alter your mind?" he asked.

"Certainly not."

"I think you are ungrateful."

"Possibly."

Her attitude hurt him. She might, he thought, have made some pretence of caring more. He took a sheet of writing-paper and tried, as shortly as possible, to explain in writing exactly what had happened. The reply reached him the next night. It said:

"I'm coming home to-morrow. Don't worry. I have found a much better cook.

Your darling wife,

ROSEMARY."

OLD BLEACH PORCELAIN DAMASKS

OLD CHELSEA

One of a series of Designs based upon celebrated pieces of Old English Porcelains

Many Eastern designs were reproduced at Chelsea; the most notable among them was the Chinese Feng-Hoang, or Phœnix, the bird of good omen, which, like the Willow Pattern, has survived to this day, and may still be purchased in the shops. A similarity of china and table damask design is a new, but surely pleasing, notion.

"Old Bleach" Table Damasks are famed the world over for their fine quality and rare beauty. Their strength and durability are due, in no small measure, to the fact that they are bleached by the old-fashioned method of exposure to sun and air; their extraordinary beauty is the result of the unusual conception of their designs. These, for the most part, are reproduced from Old English Porcelains—in every case they are carried out with remarkable fidelity to the originals, and reach a degree of beauty never before attained in Table Damasks.

Owing to the slow gentle method of grass bleaching, the output of "Old Bleach" linens is necessarily limited; therefore the above design can as yet be obtained only at the following high-class shops:

PRO THAMES

BY HARFORD WORLOCK
SKETCHES BY
A. H. D'EGVILLE

I'm not a good sailor, it upsets my liver,
I'm very soon sick of a yacht racing stunt,
But I do like the outings and inns on the river,
I never get tired of a day in a punt.
A cushion's consoling, with some one else poling
Up stream (that of Isis is stronger than Cam's),
Though a punter who's bad'll need aid from your paddle,
Or else you will find that he'll break into dams.

For punting's an art not acquired in a second,
And though on the punt pole your hold should be grim,
If you grip when it's muddy you'll soon quit the deck, and
You'll be up the pole, if you're not in the swim.
The will of the wisp'll entice folks to his pool,
The legend declares, but the Thames pulls you in,
If you've sought a backwater, and thoughtlessly caught a
Young wisp of the willow round under your chin.

Of course you'll find river hogs, just as with motors,
Who fill up the locks as if they'd bought the earth,
In Jazz-coloured blazers, and hats they call "boaters"
Their breeding appears when they push for their "berth."
The boatmen all rook 'em from Hampton to Cookham,
The Thames gets the stumps of more weeds that are rank,
They think it's the fashion to make a big splash, an'
To show what a hole they can make in the bank!

Still punting's much safer than outrigger skiffs or Collapsible dinghies with umbrella hulls.
Besides, sliding seaters soon render you stiff, sore,
And blistered, and, if you catch crabs, break your "skulls."
But a punt in backwaters with somebody's daughter's
Top hole, for the job of being "tender" is hers.
You need not take Miss Jones' aunt, for now chaperones aren't
The fashion; besides, "Autres Thames, autres mœurs!"

ATHLETICS

The 'Varsities "Big Four"

THE victory of the Oxford and Cambridge team in the two-mile relay race at the recent Inter-Collegiate Athletic Meeting in Philadelphia, when, incidentally, they set up a fresh world's record (7 min. 50 2-5th secs.) for the race, beating the existing record by 2 3-5th secs., is a great triumph for English amateur athletics. It was Stallard, the Cambridge miler, who, taking up the running from Tatham, gave his side the lead with a mighty effort; Milligan, the Oxford miler, increased it, and Rudd, Oxford's great sprinter, finished the final stage with forty yards to spare. Illinois were second and Pennsylvania third. Montague (Oxford) and Jeppe (Oxford), moreover, were second in the three miles and the hurdles respectively, so that Great Britain's chances on the track at the Olympic Games are not by any means as hopeless as they appeared to be at one time. There is life in the Old Country yet, and if we are beaten it will be through lack of funds rather than of good athletes.

LAWN TENNIS

A "Scare" Stunt

THOSE who knew better were not a little amused at the rumours, recently circulated, that there was imminent danger of a 'split" in the lawn tennis world. It was suggested that the Lawn Tennis Association and the All-England Lawn Tennis Club had come, or were coming, to loggerheads over the contemplated move of the club to another ground.

Pourparlers in Progress

IT is, of course, generally recognised that the position with regard to the Championship meeting as between the L.T.A. and the All-England Club is a delicate one. The Club has "run" the Championships ever since the beginning of things, and after the Association came in to being it continued to run them by prescriptive right, although the Association is the governing body of the game. But this apparent anomaly has been got over by means of an agreement between the two bodies (which has been in existence for some time and has still three years to run), under which the Association takes a measure of control, and also, incidentally, a share of the profits. The contemplated move has led to, if it has not actually necessitated, a supplemental agreement which is now under discussion.

A "Split" Unlikely

It is perfectly natural that in the course of the negotiations between the two bodies points of difference should have arisen; but they are not of sufficient magnitude to justify the rumour of a "split." The Council of the Association and the Committee of the Club are at one as regards the main provisions of the new agreement, and are both strongly desirous that it should go through without a hitch. If the new agreement is ratified it will remain in force for twenty-five years. Even if it does not, the old agreement (as I mentioned above) has still three years to run, so that nothing very terrible can happen in the near future.

E. M. BAERLEIN
Who has just established a new record by winning the Singles and Doubles championships both at Tennis and Rackets

TENNIS AND RACKETS

Baerlein's "Double"

For anyone to win the championship at two games in one year is a rare occurrence. In 1902 Eustace Miles won the Singles and Doubles Championship at rackets and the Singles Championship at tennis, and E. M. Baerlein helped him to establish that record by being his partner in the rackets doubles. Now—eighteen years later—Baerlein has himself achieved the same feat, and, what is more, has gone one better, for at Queen's Club last week, partnered by W. Renshaw, he won the newly instituted Doubles Championship of tennis, and is, consequently, Singles and Doubles champion at both games. At rackets Baerlein, though not so agile as he used to be, is still a wonderful player, whilst at tennis he is absolutely in a class by himself, so that if anybody equals his record in the near future the most likely person to do it will be himself.

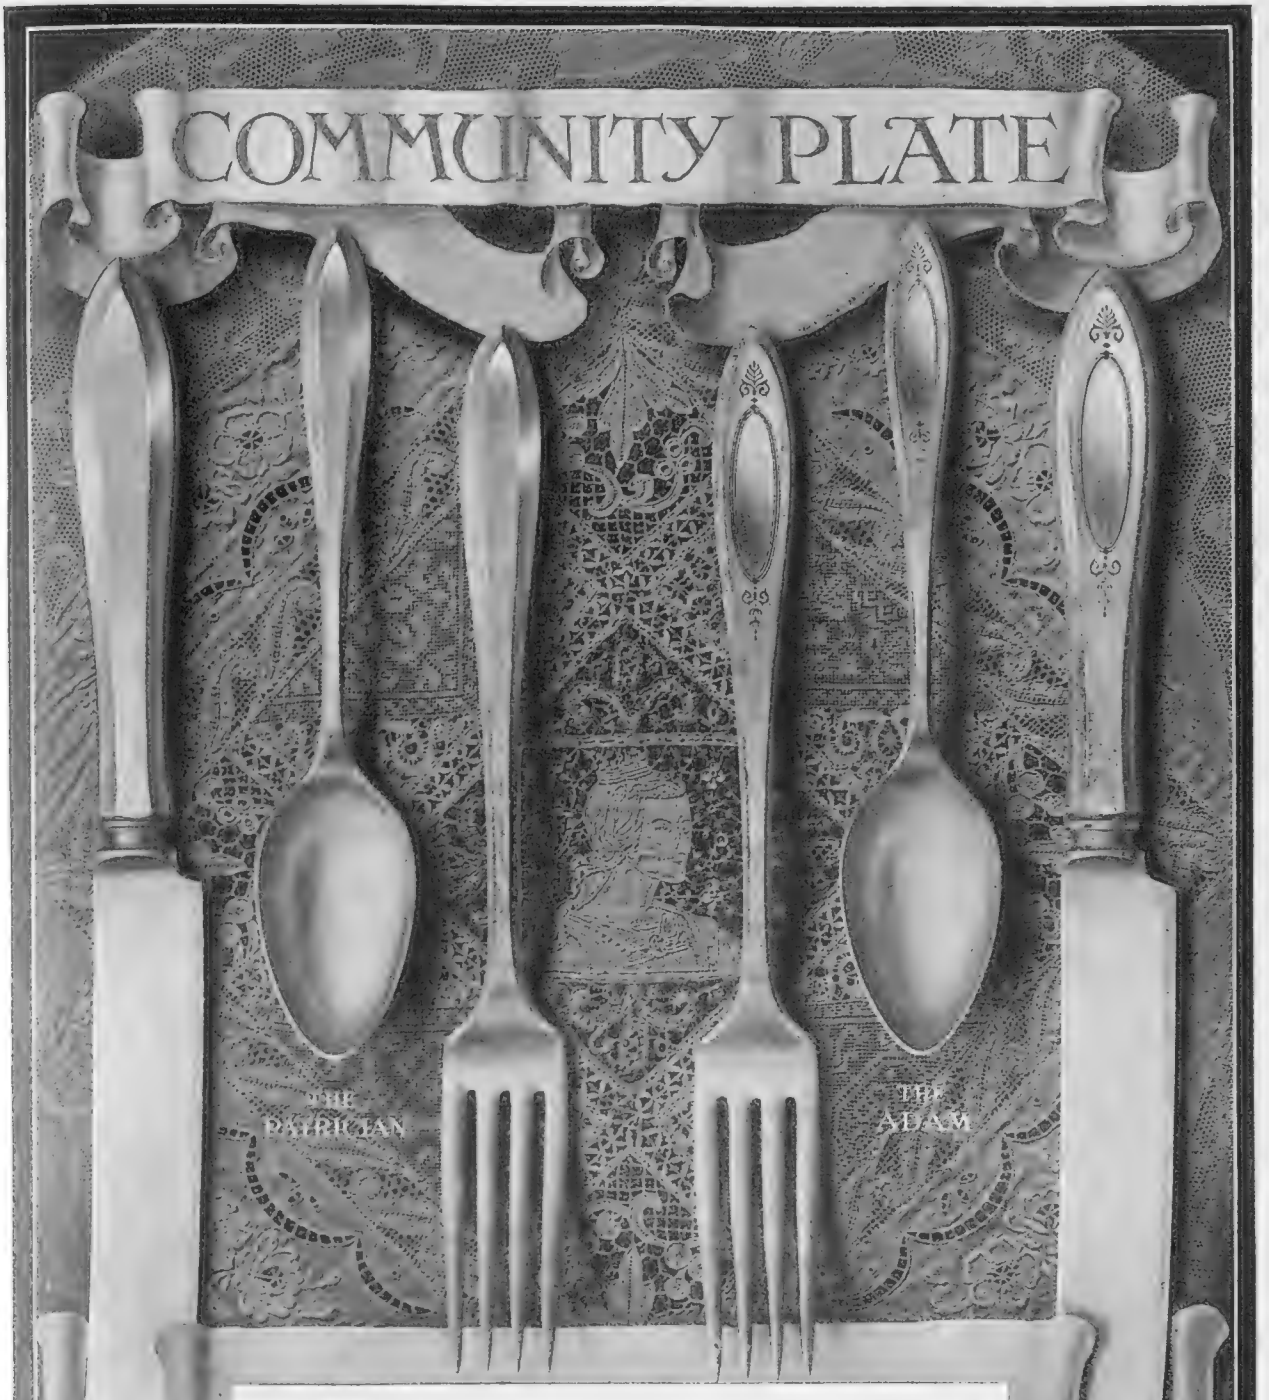
COMMUNITY PLATE



RUSTLESS KNIVES £5 15s. PER DOZ.—TEA SPOONS 34/6 PER DOZ.—DINNER FORKS 75/- PER DOZ.

THESE new styles of Community Plate worthily uphold the fame of the Period Designs in this beautiful silverware. The "Patrician" is a style of pure outline formed in Stuart times; it gives the note of completion to Jacobean furnishing. The Adam, with its delicate inlay, echoes the cherished decoration of a later period.

GUARANTEED FOR FIFTY YEARS

In point of quality COMMUNITY PLATE is unexcelled. Period designs, in canteens containing everything for six or twelve people, from £15 15 0, or separate tablespoons 75/- per dozen. Other instances are given above. ON EXHIBITION at leading silversmiths. Illustrated booklet and list of dealers upon request.

RACING·NOTIONS

BY "CARBINE"

"SOLLY" AND "SAMMY" By "The Tout"

Mr. S. B. Joel and his astute trainer, Sam Loates, are always prominent figures in the "saddling enclosure." The "petticoat" jacket is always a force to be reckoned with; moreover, brother "Solly" is not a little anxious to get level with brother "Jack" and add a blue riband to his other trophies. With this end in view we may rest assured that Mr. S. B. Joel will never look back until the goal is reached, even though his beard should grow down to his feet in the attempt

Chester

THERE is no getting away from the fact that racing is going more strongly than ever it did. I remember Chester Cup days when the Roodee appeared to be overflowing with humanity and it looked impossible to find accommodation for more spectators. Yet since resumption after the War, the crowds have been vaster still, and last week records again went by the board at Chester, the attendances exceeding all previous limits. You can well imagine that in these circumstances it was not comfortable racing, even in the County Stand. On Cup day you had fairly to fight your way to your bookie on the rails, and it was almost impossible to get about in Tattersall's ring. But everyone took the discomforts quite cheerfully, and even on the last day another big crowd rolled up.

Good Night

WHAT was wrong with Good Night in the Chester Cup? For such a strong favourite his display was dreadfully poor, and he never looked like justifying the confidence of those connected with his stable. And yet a very good judge assures me that the colt will win the Manchester Cup. I suppose his failure at Chester was primarily due to the fact that he was absolutely unsuited to the course. He is a big horse for this circular track, and his jockey could never get him properly going. Celandine was a bit unlucky. She began very slowly, and not until the race was nearly over did she begin to warm up.

Mr. Curzon's Success

OUR STEPHEN scored very comfortably, and nobody will begrudge Mr. Frank Curzon his success, for his horses have not been in good form for some time. He will be able to have a pleasant house-warming in his new residence at Newmarket on the strength of this good win.

The Newmarket Stakes

WE are promised a very interesting race for the Newmarket Stakes this week. Its great feature, of course, will be the appearance of Allenby, who is fully entitled to his place as second favourite for the Derby. The colt's performance in the Guineas was extremely meritorious, and many good judges expect him to turn the tables on Tetratema in the Derby. For my own part I question whether Mr. Raphael's colt is a better stayer than the grey, but his race over a severe course on Wednesday will be a good test. He will have some useful antagonists, but I do not think we need look beyond Allenby for the winner. On the same afternoon Lord Archer may take the Flying Handicap, having now found his best form.

Week-End Meetings

AT the end of the week there will be racing at Gatwick and Haydock Park. At the former meeting on Friday the Alexandra Handicap will bring out some speedy three-year-olds. Twenty may win for Lord Carnarvon, and on the same day Flower Day should take the Reigate Handicap. The Prince's Handicap on the following day may be won by Skyraker. At Haydock Park my selections are Hoprend for the Manor Handicap and Dola for the Three-Year-Old-Handicap. The next of the really big handicaps will be the Manchester Cup, in which I expect to see CHUETTE make a good show, for the course and distance should just suit us, but I shall discuss this event later on.

Railway Arrangements

En passant, I should remind those who propose to travel to Newmarket this week, that the Great Eastern Railway are running an excellent special service of trains between Liverpool Street, St. Pancras, and Newmarket on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, including two trains each way with restaurant cars attached.

A Scratch Game in India

BY HOWARD K. ELCOCK

SHOWING THE FATE OF ONE WHO PLAYED A BATTERY CHARGER!

It is the Englishman's privilege to grumble, and there is still much "grousing" in the City at the Budget in general and E.P.D. (Excess Profits Duty) in particular. Protests galore have been entered against the latter, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, having categorically declared that he must have its estimated proceeds "in meal or in malt," the solution of the conundrum rests in the discovery of a suitable substitute. The latest panacea proposed is a "flat rate tax" on all industrial profits and at the time of writing negotiations are proceeding with a view to a modus vivendi, the volume of the tax being the principal bone of contention—the principle once agreed—and the bilateral measurements pretty wide apart.

Mr. Chamberlain, fortified with his "Debt Reduction" programme, and moving on interior lines, is executing the sword dance, the captains of industry, out in the open, the egg ditto between (1) E.P.D. (2) flat rate, (3) war-wealth tax. Impost number one, at the enhanced rate of 60 per cent., being anathema, and number three even worse, it may reasonably be expected that a compromise will be arrived at on No. 2. With the scheduled Corporation Tax thrown in, joint-stock enterprise will be sufficiently flattened, whatever the result of the pending palaver.

So accustomed is the Stock Exchange to alarums, excursions—including the May Day march to Brighton—and fluctuations that it watches with becoming sang-froid the evolution of the Budgetary protoplasm. It has, as I anticipated, dismissed its fears of dear money—a 7 per cent. Bank rate at first gave it furiously to think—and recovered from the effects of the recent general shake-out. This caused serious losses in many directions, but the lame House-dogs have been helped over the stile, while the stocks thrown overboard have found their way into stronger hands. Business is still on a comparatively restricted scale, especially in the more speculative markets where the burnt child fears the fire, but sales by rattled holders have ceased, and buyers are, in increasing numbers, "going over the top."

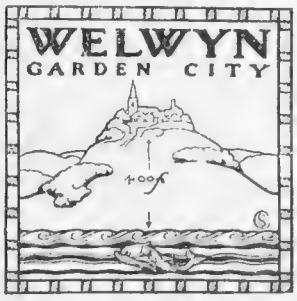
"BACKSHEES(H)" By Stan Terry

And well they may, for, bar an international political earthquake, prices have assuredly, in countless cases, touched bottom. First and foremost in that category come British Government securities, giving at the present level returns almost beyond the miser's dream, although I, perhaps, say it as shouldn't. The sedate investor can pay his money and take his choice, not forgetting that on purely patriotic principles preferential purchase should be made of the new-fangled Treasury Bonds.

French 5 and 4 per cents., at 43 and 34 respectively, look tempting, although handicapped by the depreciation of the franc, but Chinese 5 per cents. of 1896 at 78, are, in my opinion, the pick of the Foreign basket: they are secured on the Customs under international control, the rapid redemption at par by enormous drawings punctually effected (the last was £500,000, in February), adding a sporting flavour, as well as value, to the bond. A Chinaman's word is as good as his bond, and his I.O.U. fills the bill. The 4½ per cents. of 1898 at 61, with a second lien on the Customs, run the Fives to a short head. Verb. sap.

To those of my readers in search of a high return on their money, I would confidently recommend the common stock of the Buenos Ayres and Pacific Railway, which, is now going great guns. The increase in traffic receipts since July last is close on a million and a half sterling, and the Company now, thanks to the favourable exchange, earning something like 12 per cent. on its comparatively small ordinary capital, will pay a minimum dividend of 6 per cent. for the current financial year. The return is practically 10 per cent. at the present price of 62.

The pound shares of the Sudan Plantations, Ltd., have gone back from 8½ to 4¼ on sales by small holders of the new shares recently issued at 3, unable to pay for same in full. The company will make enormous profits when its cotton-growing programme is completed, and a full recovery in the price of the shares is a foregone conclusion. Those of the Amalgamated Cotton Mills Trust, mentioned in the last issue of The Bystander, have advanced to 1⅞, and are bound for a higher level. Shylock



Welwyn Garden City

The subscription list of Welwyn Garden City Limited, is now open.

Welwyn Garden City Ltd., has been formed to establish a new town for residence and industry on a site nearly 4 square miles in extent on the Great Northern main line in Hertfordshire, 21 miles from King's Cross.

The town has been planned for a population of 40,000 to 50,000, and will be of the size of Chelmsford or Colchester.

This is a sound business scheme for dealing with the housing problem on economic lines. The object of the Company is to provide fully equipped industrial sites in conjunction with housing sites for workers, and residences for staffs. The land has been purchased for the purpose of the scheme at its agricultural value from the Marquis of Salisbury and Lord Desborough.

The Directors are the Earl of Lytton, Sir Theodore Chambers, K.B.E. F.S.I., Mr. J. R. Farquharson, Lt. Col. F. E. Fremantle, M.P., Mr. Ebenezer Howard, Mr. W. T. Layton, C.H., Sir John Mann, K.B.E., Mr. C. B. Purdom, Captain R. L. Reiss, Mr. Bolton Smart and Mr. Samuel Smethurst.

The Easter Hare

BY THE BYSTANDER IN OCCUPATION

"Der Oster Hase," in Rhineland, is a personage only second in importance in the minds of children to those great Christmas personages, Nikolaus, the Holy Man, and the Christkind. For the Easter Hare it is who, on the Saturday preceding Easter Day, leaves his mystic home high up on the hills enclosing the Rhine, or amongst the extinct volcanoes of the Eiffel, and comes with long bounds through the grass of the home meadow, where the fruit trees are looking for two days like gigantic white powder-puffs on stalks, with their wealth of dazzling white blossoms. After his arrival, the subsequent conduct of this mysterious beast is in some respects wrapt in mystery. Far from devouring the young lettuces, whose dainty green promises magnificent Kopf Salat in a couple of days, or rooting up the flower beds, as any common or work-a-day hare might do, he busies himself with the most beneficent tasks. There is a slight controversy as to the origin of his gifts, Marichen and Gretchen maintaining, with feminine omniscience, that of course he lays them, while Hans and Karl, from the pinnacle of masculine superiority and two years' seniority, rudely designate this theory as "Quatsch," and stoutly affirm that he finds them in the mountains and brings them in a basket-carrier on his back, adducing as proof the effigy of himself (always with basket) that he leaves behind.

WHICHEVER of the two controversialists is right, the fact remains that the morning's light shows no sign of the nocturnal visitor himself, but for those who are up early enough, behind the plants in the garden and amongst the long grass in the meadow, he has left—laid or brought—a number of delectable eggs, the finding of which is keeping. Some are in substance extraordinarily like the product of the hen roost, save that the shells are of a glorious purple, red, or green. Others are obviously the product of the artificial age in which the modern Easter hare lives, and prove to be made of papier maché and filled with bon-bons, which, even if these are only Ersatz—for the Oster Hase, like other people, has felt the effects of the War—are still bright-coloured and sticky.

BEST of all, the liebe Hase has concealed, in some unsuspected corner, a life-size effigy of himself, standing on his hind-legs, with his basket slung pack-like over his shoulders. What cries of delight announce his discovery, and what a patter of clog-clad "Füsschen" rattles down the red-tiled path as the lucky discoverer hastens to "Mutter." For the Hare, before his departure for the hills, wherein he will dwell invisible to human eye till next Easter, has deposited with "die Mutter" the largest, most succulent, and delicious egg of all—probably of chocolate — and this magnificent prize is the award of the happy finder of the effigy of himself, which the benevolent beast has concealed in the most difficult spot of all.

THE Oster Hase seems to add to his other virtues that of an appreciation of religion and respect for the ceremonies of the church, for if one of the family is going through the trying period of preparation for the "Erste Kommunion," he or she almost invariably discovers the papier maché effigy, and so secures the special egg. A well-earned reward, that, as consolation for the troubles of a week later, when the little white-clad girls — pronounced by Occupiers to be "perfectly sweet" —and the unnaturally solemn little black-clad boys, with white brassards (not stamped and numbered by the Military Permit Office), condemned as "little horrors," are to be seen, the self-conscious heroines and heroes of the hour, at every street corner. They look chilly and uncomfortable enough in their ceremonial clothing. One hopes that at the "Kommunionsfeier" in the evening, when their parents, uncles, aunts, and cousins to the nth degree, have a thorough "blow-out," that the sacrificial-looking little victims are not absolutely butchered to make a German's holiday, but are permitted to have a real good gorge of Pumpernickel in a quiet corner by themselves.

The Literary Log

Rolled by Ralph Straus

ONCE upon a time, you may remember, there was an obstinate, playful young gentleman of the name of Stalky. Mr. Kipling, with his unerring instinct, picked on him as a suitable protagonist. The young gentleman grew up with the years. He naturally went into the Army. He naturally did well. And when, towards the end of 1917, the British Government desired to put a spoke into the wheels of Germano-Turkish propaganda in Persia and the Caucasus, it was to Stalky, alias Major-General Dunsterville, that the command of a "hush-hush" army was given. In The Adventures of Dunsterforce (Arnold: 18*s.* net) the story of this peculiar expedition is told by its leader with a simplicity which compels the warmest admiration.

IT was originally intended to attempt some sort of an organisation of the Christian populations in that south-western corner in order to make good the break in the line caused by the Russian Revolution; but when you are dealing with revolutionaries who are much too busy passing resolutions to do anything else, this is not easy. And the Dunsterforce was by no means the Army Corps which some of the more optimistic Russians who were not Bolsheviks hoped to see. Its numbers were so microscopic that you can hardly understand how its leader managed to do as much as he did. The chief object was Baku, and Baku he eventually succeeded in reaching, but the fall of that town of oil was inevitable, and the Dunsterforce retired (with great difficulty), after having accomplished far more than could have been expected of it, and with the knowledge that, without its presence in those difficult regions, affairs in the world-war might not have gone as they did. The grown-up Stalky shows himself to be a diplomat as well as a soldier, and his book is extraordinarily interesting and delightfully unexpected.

APPARENTLY Passion (Duckworth: 7*s.* 6*d.* net) is Mr. Shaw Desmond's first published novel. It is a peculiar book, baffling in parts, with a wild, rugged strength of its own, an elemental sort of story, which whirls you along the dizzy paths of Big Business and gives you stark glimpses of a life which symbolises that Will to Power of which Nietzsche has spoken. The style of the book shows Mr. Desmond to be an original thinker. Occasionally he shocks you by his very repression. He wraps up a brutality in a new sort of bag, an uncomfortable bag, which is, somehow, horribly transparent. But he is a powerful writer, and Passion is a powerful book.

IN brief, it is the story of a young Irishman who, living squalidly in Soho, works his way up in the Big Business of a Copper King. His rise is rapid, and he is in danger of forgetting all else but this love of power, when a girl—a woman-doctor—saves him. For it happens that the Irishman is an artist as well as a business man. He writes a book pseudonymously, which shows up the Big Business in which he is engaged, and that is the end. For the future Big Business and all that it signifies may go hang; it does not really matter at all. (That, by the way, is a discovery which has yet to be made by a number of "important" people.) The Soho scenes are described with a realism quite out of the ordinary, and the atmosphere surrounding the old lady with the curls is about the most sinister thing I have discovered in a book for some time. You must read Passion. It may be the first of a series of books of permanent value and interest.

THE LITERARY LOG (concluded)

The Third Window (Secker: 6*s.* net), by Anne Douglas Sedgewick, is a little masterpiece of a story—very short, very poignant and compelling. The situation is simple. A devoted wife loses her husband in the War. Another man is in love with her. There is no good reason why they should not marry, but when a man dies—what happens to him? Does he really go? The wave of rather hysterical belief which is passing just now over this country touches Antonia Wellwood.

Photograph "Dora"

MISS CATHLEEN NESBIT

Who is playing in "The Grain of Mustard Seed," Mr. H. M. Harwood's new play, at the Ambassadors Theatre

HER husband, she thinks, is somehow still there—she can see him by the fountain, if she looks through the third window of her room—and in this belief she is aided by another woman, a cousin to whom her husband in the past had bared his soul. You are intensely sorry for Captain Saltonhall, but recognise the fact that Antonia can never be his. You cannot argue against faith. The end is tragic, but inevitable. The story is told quite simply, and leaves an impression of singular craftsmanship in your mind.

IT is pleasant, in these days of hurry and bustle, to come across so peaceful and gracious a book as Miss Constance Hill's Mary Russell Mitford and Her Surroundings (Lane: 21*s.* net). For all her success, Miss Mitford, it is true, can never be bracketed with her two predecessors, Jane Austen or Fanny Burney, both of whom, before now, have been the subjects of Miss Hill's careful pen, but she has a niche of her own.

THE authoress of Our Village, it may be objected, wrote her own literary autobiography, of which, of course, Miss Hill makes ample use, but here gathered together are all the facts of a quiet useful life such as can be generally admired, and Miss Hill has done her work well. And in this peaceful backwater of a book, as in its predecessors, the writer's sister has provided a series of delicate drawings, which give it a particular fascination.

A modern version of the well-known picture, showing a large 40-50 h.-p. 6-cylinder Napier car behind the useful, but comparatively tiny, Scootamotor. A remarkable feature of this new Napier is its light weight per horse-power developed. Although the brake h.-p. is nearly 90, the chassis weight is only 25 cwts.

THE Postmaster-General, in conjunction with the Dutch Post Office, is desirous of establishing an air mail service between London and the Hague. Such was a recent announcement, and I hope that when May 15, the latest date for the tenders, has passed, we shall know this has been fixed up. If the postage rate for letters, etc., is to cost us more, for goodness sake let us have better and quicker service. I should like to see an aerial post service established in every country of the world, as it would do more to foster the aviation industry than all the other Government competitions put together. Perhaps if someone wins the Daily Express £10,000 prize for a flight from England to India and back, for which there are at present two entries, even that outpost of our Empire may get its flying London to Madras mail. I am glad my old ballooning friend, Air-Commodore Maitland, received plenty of publicity for his paper on "Commercial Airships," read before the Royal Society of Arts recently. The heavier-than-air craft have their points, but for carrying the big load the "gas bag" has the "power kite" beaten to a frazzle. Who knows but the passenger liner of the future will not be the airship! I am prepared to wager that in a very few years after such a service is started, it will be the most popular and paying route for those who want to journey to and from this country and India, Australia, and South Africa. It is the starting up of these enterprises which is the very devil to beat. But, there, Englishmen have thrashed worse Djinns than this, and that quite recently, too.

WHETHER the proposed single tax will stop the public buying cars is purely a question that can be answered by results. Taking the table issued in the Report on the average of 7,500 miles annual running of private cars, a distance of a trifle over 144 miles per week, the increase in taxation to petrol-users is not really very excessive to owners of cars above 20 h.p., and those under that rating pay really less than what they did under the present petrol tax and licence duties. Of course, owners who used no petrol will feel they are the real victims of the proposed change, and rightly so. But how many motorists are only using benzole pure and simple? Not enough to affect the election of a Guardian of the Poor, leave alone a Member of Parliament, scattered as they are throughout the United Kingdom. And that is why the A.A. may try to do its best for home-produced fuel users and fail, with no blame to itself but circumstance.

AT the same time, I do hope the House of Commons will reduce the £1 per h.p. to 15*s.*, if only to help

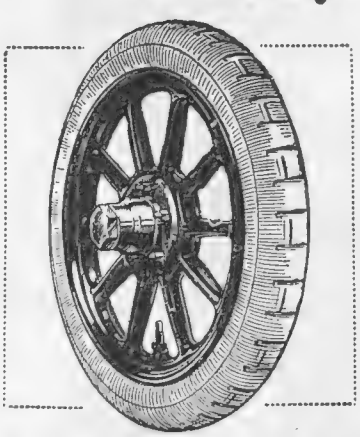
The Sankey Wheel defies every wheel strain



There are occasions when you just haven't time to think of the enormous strains you are placing upon the wheels of your car.

A sudden overwhelming emergency, and you act with instinctive swiftness—jam on both brakes, swerve, skid—anything to avoid an actual collision. Then it is that your wheels are tested to the very utmost.

Sankey Wheels emerge from such an ordeal scathless. However many miles they have run, however long they have been on the road, their unbreakable strength remains unshaken; for they are not only immensely strong but they are weatherproof and imperishable.

If your car is equipped with Sankey Wheels you need not fear the results of any wheel strain. Specify Sankey Wheels for your new car.

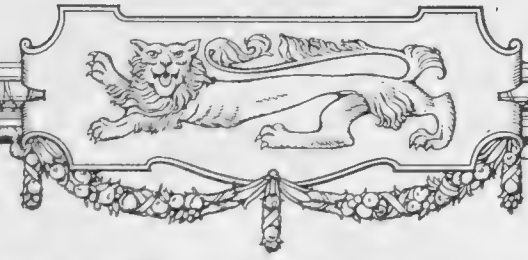
ROLLS-ROYCE



THE NEW ROLLS-ROYCE

Mr. John Prioleau, motoring editor of the "Daily Mail," narrates some of his experiences.

"This car represented the most startling advance on its forerunners than any I can remember, of any make, year, nationality, or price."

. . . . .

"Quite unlike any car I have ever known, and far and away better than any Rolls-Royce of my experience."

. . . . .

"It is really a very remarkable car."

. . . . .

"Speed and noiselessness are its outstanding features."

. . . . . .

"I have to apologise for describing a car without finding a single fault."

NOTE—The car above referred to is a standard 1920—Rolls-Royce.

MOTOR NOTES (concluded)

those car-owners who use their vehicles on week-ends as their sole recreation. It is all very fine for the Minister of Transport to say that pleasure runs are a luxury, and, consequently, should bear greater taxation, but he seems to have forgotten that all those "occasional" cars form a mighty useful reserve when the railways or motor-'buses go on strike. Many districts when the last railway strike was on would have been in a very bad way but for these motorists, who did all sorts of jobs for the Food Controller, to say nothing about taking passengers galore from one place to another. Perhaps, however, he is a confirmed optimist, and imagines such troubles won't happen again. I wish one could think he was right, but, as things be as they are, the public feel that an alternative means of travel and transport are the safest preventatives of "your money or your life" policy of strikers on the lines of communication. That is the reason why folks who don't own a car themselves are so anxious that their neighbour who does should not be compelled to give it up.

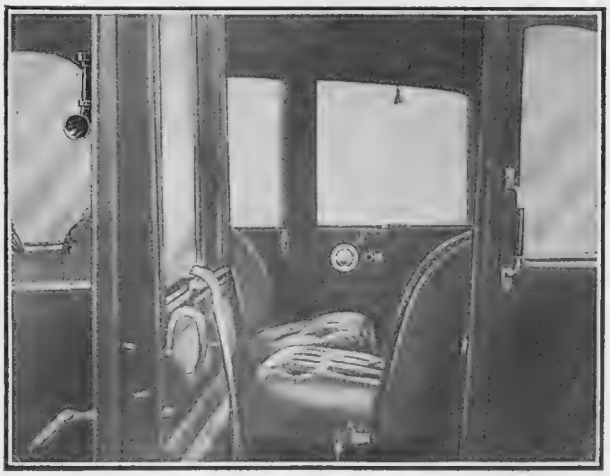
COACHBUILDERS are beginning to give deliveries of the new enclosed type of motor-carriages, and though there seems nothing very new in the designs of any one of them, I must say the general equipment for comfort of their passengers is greatly improved. For instance, I was at Harrods the other day, and, while the memsahib was giving her usual household orders, I strolled into the motor department to pass the time away and see any novelties in the way of car fittings. A very handsome limousine there was fitted with the new dictagraph equipment, which is a great improvement on the old speaking-tube to communicate with the driver. I think every enclosed motor-carriage should have one, as not only can your chauffeur or chaffeuse hear plainly when you whisper your directions, but as it has a "cut out" it is only in action when you want to use it, so no conversation can be overheard by the man at the wheel unless you want him to. The whole apparatus consists of a transmitter that looks like a vanity box, a buzzer to draw attention to the driver that the passenger wants to give him instructions, and a couple of buttons. One button works the buzzer, and you press the other while you speak quietly to the driver, for, working on the loud telephone principle, there is a "loud speaker" attachment in the horn fitted near the coachman's head upon his side of the partition. As it is capable of being fitted in any carriage in a few minutes, and is run off the electric lighting equipment or by a couple of 3-volt dry cells, it is well worth having for the few pounds it costs. Secret Service men found this motor dictagraph of great service during the War, and it is pleasant to find a "peace" use for the system after its successful career in war time.

OLD HY.



"WHISPER AND I SHALL HEAR"

This picture shows the type "A" motor dictagraph fitted in a 1920 Daimler landaulette. By pressing one of the buttons seen in the photograph the driver's attention is called, and when the other is pressed he is able to hear directions given in however low a tone. Needless to say, when the button is released, the interior of the car is once more "strictly private"

Points of distinction: The Power Unit.

THE "Austin Twenty" Engine and gearbox constitute a single complete unit with three-point suspension. The power is 45 B.H.P. at 2000 revs. per minute. The flexibility of the engine is a revelation to everyone who drives the car, and its hill climbing powers are equally remarkable. It climbed Beggars Roost, a gradient of 1 in 3 62, with five passengers up. Points which make for easy accessibility are the crankcase doors and detachable cylinder heads. A silent chain of the best type drives the camshaft, also magneto and pump spindle.

THE Buick

THE Buick is complete from every standpoint. Refinement, comfort, satisfaction and service are all provided in each model. Special needs are catered for by a wide variety, from which the type most suited for individual requirements can be selected.

IF you wish for a car of limited passenger capacity, yet with enough room to carry three in comfort, and power to take you anywhere you want to go, with a little left over—then the Buick Standard 2-Seater is the ideal choice.

ON TIPPING

LAST night I went to see that very Russian comedy of Gogol's at the Duke of York's. If you don't know your Russia—and nobody does—it makes you wonder how any Russian ever manages to pay his way at all. Obviously he must receive as much as he gives in the way of—shall we say tips?—to enable him to make a living. Actually, as everybody pays everybody else, it follows that in the end nobody pays. If only that fact were accepted life would be immensely simplified, and the rouble kept much cleaner through not changing pockets so often. But, alas! it is not accepted.

I FELT very superior at the expense of poor Russia, but it seems to me that I took our own virtues too much for granted. Even in this land of the free, or the comparatively free, we tip our way into a man's good graces on the assumption that every man has his price—which he has—sentiment apart. If Russia has a beam in her eye we have quite a handsome mote in our own, or had, for it is intended to change all that. The postmen have decided to renounce Christmas boxes—well, Christmas is a long way off. The Waiters' Unions are going to do without tips—if they can. They don't make it clear whether they object to tips because they lower the standard of wages, or because they are derogatory to a man's dignity. I don't agree about the dignity. It may be more blessed to give than to receive, but it is a more ticklish job. The tipper is furtive and apologetic, whereas the tipped easily smiles away the situation. I have seen some "gentlemen's gentlemen" who deigned to accept, much as a king might, the good things that drifted their way.

THE success of the tipping habit lies in the fact that both parties imagine that they are getting something to which they do not consider themselves quite entitled. It does not strike them that they are merely taking in each other's washing. In England we are very generous with our tips. We have a nice, kindly feeling that if someone renders us a service we must show recognition. And probably the man who is putting himself out expects a tip, so we must not disappoint him, even if we were sure of never seeing him again. But if we thought about it—and, of course, we don't—we would discover that we tip in the hope of securing a better place, or better service, than other people, which is quite unmoral and sadly against the spirit of the times, at least, I hope so. As for the man who takes the tip, the less said about his feelings the better.

ABROAD they don't keep any absurd delicacy nor unnecessary scruples. The foreigner tips in shops, in tramcars, everywhere. The working-man has no false modesty about him. I remember a porter in Paris, in the remote days when a franc was a respectable tip, laying the coin on the palm of his hand and snorting contemptuously at the shy, British young thing who had ventured to bestow it, "Ça, qu'est-ce que c'est que ça? Je suis père de famille, moi." No doubt a very good argument over there, where the State is much interested in these things. But it did not console, or convince, the poor, shy, young thing.

I REMEMBER a hotel somewhere in France — or was it in Germany?—where every bedroom had a printed tariff of the rate of tips to which the domestics were entitled. At first sight I was appalled, which was merely foolish of me, for it saved a deal of trouble. And at restaurants you tip three men at your every modest meal: the head-waiter who bows you into your chair, the mere waiter who waits on you, and the small, invariably snub-nosed person who brings you your drinks. And all according to tariff. We, at any rate, leave more to the imagination plus something else, and I have seen a young Australian squatter spend five shillings on his dinner and give the waitress half-a-crown, and she was no young charmer, I assure you.

IT is impossible to live without oiling the wheels. Even in humble restaurants, where people eat broad beans and poached eggs on toast, and a tip to the waitress was an insult to the management, the ancient rule is relaxed. Instead of a didactic "No Tips" notice, nothing is said, and nothing means that you are expected to slip the usual furtively under your plate. In clubs our nouveaux-riches are said to be debasing a high standard by disregarding the anti-tipping rules of the Medes and Persians. "You understand, of course, that tipping is not allowed," a lady secretary said earnestly to the magnificent hall porter, whom she was engaging for a ladies' club. "That, madam, is the rule of all clubs," was the haughty reply. But the law is only the law, after all.

CANDIDA

By MRS. JACK MAY

An Arabian Sash

THERE is unmistakable evidence that the Eastern influence is still paramount in dress, notable features being the elongated corsage and deep draped sash, both whereof are admirably exemplified in the accompanying original design for a fine navy serge day frock. This, again, is splendidly typical of the simple gown carried out of the realms of the commonplace by clever relieving touches. Of first importance is the Arabian sash, for which a heavy mist-grey crêpe de Chine is used, embroidered with a characteristic design in black silk and coloured wools. The long, simply knotted ends in front are as correct as they are decorative, while the grey is picked up in organdi muslin for the slight halter collar and original falling cuffs. Small need, perhaps, to point out the distinctiveness of the silhouette, expressed in the subtly pleated and slightly outstanding hips, the line of the long bodice just dropping into a few unconsidered folds over the top of the sash, and those long, very close-fitting sleeves, each one a mere nothing in itself, cleverly conjoined to create a peculiarly chic and attractive whole.

A Fine Show of Summer Millinery

IT is a real pleasure and illuminative experience to pay a visit to the millinery salons at John Barkers, Kensington High Street. Such admirable taste is shown in the selection of the models, and it is a safe premise that there is choice for one and all, though naturally the crême of the display is found in the beautiful hats arranged for smart afternoon, garden party, race, and visiting wear. The costly osprey floats persuasively on many of these, not the least attractive example being found in the chic chapeau illustrated, a small shape exquisitely wrought in a mixture of nigger brown crêpe de Chine and superfine straw, that forms so effective a fond for some osprey in tone. The other hat sketched is of quite different character, and bears evidence of the becoming virtues of a large picture shape in black lace crinoline, the high crown encircled by a narrow band of pale yellow ribbon velvet, caught at one side with a large pink rose mounted with blue lavender and leaves in the same delicate shade of yellow as the velvet band. And

The Promise of Spring

WITH never-failing enterprise Harrods are, as usual, among the first to bring out a beautifully illustrated catalogue of the new season's fashions, each page whereof relates of some exclusive and much-coveted possession. Leading off with evening frocks of the daintiest, most desirable character, the whole story of dress is attacked in an attractive and masterful manner, a veritable triumph being achieved in four artistically coloured groups comprising le dernier cri in blouses, day and evening mantles, smart frocks, and sports coats and jumpers of irreproachable value.

The catalogue will be sent post free to any reader of THE BYSTANDER desirous of making practical use of the information contained therein.

The "Dexter" Weatherproof

WE are all out for economy in buying nowadays, but many are very much mistaken if they imagine this to mean the purchase of shoddy garments that have a face value and nothing more. What we want is sound, solid worth, calculated to repay the initial expenditure by wearing well and looking well for all time. Now, when in quest of a wrap-coat, the "Dexter" weatherproof garments should be borne well in mind. These are all beautifully cut and made of the firm's own special proofed materials, which, although devoid of rubber, are able to withstand a deluge of rain. And yet at the same time, a particular self-ventilating process enables the wrap to be worn with comfort in fine weather, the smart styles provided being quite suitable for race meetings, motoring, and, indeed, any contingency when a coat of this description is required.

THE MENU

THE TREATMENT OF IMPORTED MUTTON

A Braised Leg of Mutton
Loin of Mutton à la Venaison
Curry of Mutton en Casserole

Now that we are promised more and cheaper mutton, a few ways of dealing with this somewhat unpopular meat may be found helpful. The recipes given will be of use if the mutton in question is inclined to be tough—it so often is, in these days of imported meat.

A Braised Leg of Mutton

Put into a stewpan three slices of bacon, a little dripping, five small onions, and three shallots. Place the leg of mutton on these, sprinkle it with some sweet herbs, parsley and bay-leaf. Close the lid tightly, and let it cook for fifteen minutes. Turn the joint over for another fifteen minutes, and then add a pint of good stock. Let it stew gently for 4½ hours, if the leg of mutton weighs 7 lbs. A quarter of an hour before serving, thicken a little stock with flour, and mix it well with the gravy in the stewpan. Serve on a very hot dish with carrots and the gravy poured round.

Loin of Mutton à la Venaison

Take the skin off a loin of mutton, weighing about 6 lbs.; it can be boned if preferred. Flour it and put it into a stewpan, lean end downwards, with one and a half pints of water, a Spanish onion stuck with eight cloves, a little salt, and some whole pepper and allspice. Let it stew gently for an hour and a quarter, then turn it fat downwards, add a glass of sherry, two teaspoonfuls of pickled walnut, two ditto of anchovy essence, and a little cayenne pepper, stew it for another hour and a quarter. Then take it out, sprinkle breadcrumbs over it, and brown it in the gas oven. Skim all the fat off the gravy, and serve it in a tureen. Currant jelly should be handed with the mutton, and tomatoes or spinach, and new potatoes for the vegetables.

Curry of Mutton en Casserole

Fry two or three onions a light brown in margarine or butter, and stir into the latter a tablespoonful of curry-powder and the same of ground rice. Let them cook until dry and of a dark colour, stirring all the time. Then take 1 lb. of uncooked mutton, cut up small, and let it fry until the meat is partly cooked. Then add a large teacupful of milk. Cover it, and let it cook slowly. When it has thickened, cover the saucepan and let it stew until the gravy becomes quite thick. If the meat is imported mutton, let the curry simmer very gently for more than an hour. Squeeze in the juice of a lemon, and serve with boiled rice. Chutney should be handed. EMILIA

CLOTHES MAKE THE MAN——if the right tailor makes the clothes.

The tailoring house of J. & H. Ellis has as its aim the rendering of a tailoring service that meets the need of the habitually well-dressed man.

Each client is waited upon by the cutter and workhand from the time the first measurements are taken until the suit has been fitted on for the last time, and all the while under the active supervision of Mr. Ellis in order that advice and suggestions may be combined in a manner that will give the result which each individual taste calls for.

A real all-wool, Indigo Dye Blue Serge or a genuine pure wool Scotch Tweed of first-class workmanship, will be supplied for 8 Guineas.

If you cannot call, patterns sent free to any part of the world.

THE WILL-TO-BE-WELL

"By the force of my will I shall subdue this disease."— Buddha.

"If you can force your heart, and nerve and sinew
To serve your turn long after they are gone,
And so hold on when there is nothing in you
Except the Will which says to them: 'Hold on!' "— Kipling.

"I must — I will — get back my health!"

The man who says this to himself — really meaning it — is thereby helping and hastening his own recovery — so much does will-power influence bodily processes.

But in nerve weakness, unfortunately, the will-power itself is enfeebled; the patient is too limp and listless to make the necessary effort of volition; and it is here that Sanatogen comes to his aid.

For Sanatogen, writes a physician in the Medical Press and Circular, "acts as a powerful nervine tonic, supplying stimulus to the higher centres of the brain and spinal cord and exciting the will-power to vigorous action."

Yet Sanatogen, though so wonderfully invigorating, is quite harmless — it causes no reaction—and its effects are permanent. That is why all nerve sufferers should

FIRMLY RESOLVE TO TAKE

SANATOGEN

THE GENUINE FOOD-TONIC

Do not, however, be misled into thinking that other preparations will produce the same effects. "At first glance," writes Professor Goldwater, M.D., in Therapeutic Medicine, "Sanatogen would not seem to be greatly different from other food powders on the market, but this similarity is only superficial, for a further study of its qualities proves that the union of the casein with the glycero-phosphates endows it with quite distinctive properties."

Ask your chemist for the genuine original Sanatogen—from 2/3 to 10/9 per tin—and see that it bears our name and address on the label.

Beauty and Health go hand in hand

Out of good health beauty is created, and only by good health can beauty live. Fresh air, sunshine, cleanliness—all these make for health; but there is one all-important factor—the food you eat daily. The influence of food for and against health is most important, and you owe it to yourself to pay attention to your diet.

St. Ivel Lactic Cheese is the ideal food during the spring and summer months. It contains an abundance of natural properties which nourish the body without overheating the blood, or taxing the digestion. The lactic culture, which this cheese possesses in enormous quantities, safeguards your health by eliminating the harmful elements created in the system by other foods.

Apperson Eight

"The Eight with Eighty less parts"

THE LEADER FOR TWENTY-SIX YEARS.

Since 1893 the manufacturers of the Apperson have been building motor cars. The present day Apperson is the fulfilment of these many years of experience and experiment. It is the unapproachable EIGHT in BEAUTY–BALANCE–POWER.

NOTE THESE ATTRIBUTES—

The Apperson picks up from 1 to 40 miles in 20 seconds on top gear—without jar or sudden jerk. It comes to a dead stop from 40 miles in 4 seconds in 40 yards—again without jolt. Rapid starts and stops without shock—an Apperson characteristic born of long constructive experience. Eighty less parts—another Apperson achievement—giving minimum friction, maximum acceleration and more miles per hour.

The Apperson is of pleasing appearance—grace with dignity—every line dictated by good taste. Luxurious upholstery and exquisite appointments place upon it the cachet of distinction.

The Growing Popularity of Straight-Side Tyres

Especially to owner-drivers the greater comfort and convenience of Goodyear Straight-Side Tyres have a growing appeal as a measure for relieving the worst troubles of motoring.

The delightful ease with which these tyres may be applied to the rim or quickly removed marks their superiority over old beaded-edge types, and makes them ideal for touring or city traffic.

Although Goodyear Straight-Side tyres are best known as standard equipment on leading American cars, we confidently predict the adoption of straight-side tyres and rims by many British makers within the next twelve months.

If you drive a car equipped with straight-side rims, ask your nearest Goodyear Dealer for Goodyear Straight-Side Tyres. He also carries Goodyear Heavy Tourist Tubes in stock.

"Smooth Severity"

During the reigns of the Kings of the House of Hanover great care and pride was taken by all men in their headdress, and it was the fashion to follow the King's style of hairdressing. After the wig and perruque had been discarded, it was fashionable to wear unruly hair brushed up stiffly from the face. As time went on so the mode of dressing the hair gradually changed until we have to-day "smooth severity," the approved fashion. This can only be attained by the regular use of the famous Anzora, which controls the most refractory head of hair and keeps it neat and tidy all day.

Anzora Cream for slightly greasy scalps, and Anzora Viola for dry scalps, are sold by all Chemists, Hairdressers, Stores, etc., in 1/6 and 2/6 (double quantity) bottles

"Mummie-Dibbs"

THE vapour is rising from the steaming bath, and the little naked body, so beautiful in its unashamed innocence, is trying to play with everything within reach of wee clutching arms—baby's bath time with Gibbs Cold Cream Soap.

How he will crow with delight and signal supreme contentment with vigorously kicking limbs when he feels the emollient oils taking all the burn and soreness from his tender skin—the beneficent action of cold cream. Bath time with Gibbs means a happy time for baby. The soothing lather is a panacea for all the surface discomforts of babyhood, besides being a food for the delicate tissues that underlie the skin.

And Mummie knows that there is nothing finer or purer than Gibbs Cold Cream Soap—the result of over two hundred years of soap-making experience—guaranteed by the House of Gibbs. A soap and a proven skin emollient in one, Gibbs Cold Cream Soap ensures for your baby a healthy skin and complexion. It is the best for baby—and for you.
